Unexpected Revenge of the Maddened Tiger

Madrid, Jan. 13.

THE recent duel between a bull and a Bengal tiger in the bull-fight arena in Barcelona inspired a similar contest in the city of San Sebastian—but with quite unexpected and shocking results.

At the very climax of the excitement, while the men and women of nobility and wealth stood on the chairs in the arena boxes and the building trembled with the cries of the nine thousand spectators, the tiger broke loose. The mad rush of the bull against the steel sides of the fighting cage had sprung the bars. Suddenly catching the tiger on his horns, the bull once more bore down on the weakened walls of the cage, and the tiger was forced through and out into the arena.

In a fury of pain and crazed by the screaming thousands on all sides, the beast sprang up the side of the nearest arena box. Half holding by his right leg, the tiger shot forward his left paw and caught the young Countess Cecilia de Tesifonti as she ran to the rear of the box. The long

PLAYING BALL ON THE FACE OF BEAUTY

BEAUTY is the chief quality which thrills every masculine heart and gives woman her world-ruling magnetic power. Vigor and beauty are her rightful inheritance. Beauty of soul she may have, but unless her spirituelle beauty be expressed in bodily comeliness, it is invariably passed by unnoticed. With the passing of youth and beauty passes also that charm and power which places woman upon a pedestal above all the sordidness of life.

It used to be a serious matter to discover ugly wrinkles beginning to transgress upon the features, the plump, smooth skin becoming flabby and loose, relaxing into unsightly folds, and showing here and there disfiguring hollows and angles. It has become a simple matter now, however, to recall the charms which win hearts as in days of yore, restoring that which was lost, and preserving that which still remains against departure.

Keeping Dimples from Becoming Wrinkles.

The simplest and most ideal method is by means of a gentle massage with a little electro-magnetic massage ball, covered with soft little bumps, which is rolled over the skin of the face, neck, arms, shoulders and bust, creating a gentle exhilarating and stimulating effect, not alone by means of electro-magnetism, but also by the sensation of its soft little rolling, the knobs indenting the surface so softly that it feels like velvet, but yet stimulating and renewing the circulation of the blood, gradually increasing in rapidity until all the layers of the skin are alive and glowing with the rapidly renewing processes of the blood, building up as fast as it tears down the tissues through nature's fires, restoring youthful freshness to faded complexions and completely restoring the rounded contours of youth.

Keeps the Tissues Young.

The rapidly consuming fires of renewal of the tissues keep them young and fresh. It is only when allowed to become sluggish that they become old before their time. They must, therefore, be kept alive.

As electricity is the essence of life, the process is doubly nature's own, since it reacts upon the circulation of the blood, besides giving the skin the gentle massage which would naturally be effective even without magnetism.

This little ball is just the size to fit under the chin, into the hollow of the neck, roll around the eyeball or into the angle of the nose with the cheek and the forehead. In fact, there is no corner which it may not reach. Its soft texture is pleasant to feel, besides its gentle, stimulating effect. It gives the most agreeable and soothing sensation.

That it merely indents the skin, does not pull it aside, stretch it or in any way interfere with the contour of the face is a distinctly agreeable advantage. The expression of the face, if desired, may be ultimately changed by following the directions given for keeping the ball rolling in the right direction, lifting up instead of dragging down, brightening the expression, and, by suggestion from the mirror, changing pessimism to optimism.

In order to obtain the greatest refreshment from its use, the surface of the skin to receive the manipulations should be softened and warmed, and the pores opened by the application of hot, wet towels without rubbing, simply laying them on the skin for a moment. The moistness can then be taken up by a soft linen cloth applied in soft pressure, but not rubbed.

Like Soft Magnetic Fingers.

Then comes the ball massage, the soft knobs on the surface of the ball touching the skin like so many soft little magnetic fingers, soothing the nerves and producing the most delightful and invigorating sensation. It is just firm enough to iron out every wrinkle, and just so velvety as not to irritate the most sensitive skin.

Beginning just over the nose and between the eyebrows, and holding the ball in the palm of the hand, roll it in a rotary movement, increasing the size of the circles until they extend from brow to hair. Then roll the ball up and down the forehead perpendicularly, and back and forth horizontally the full width; ending with a rotary movement in little circles all the way across from temple to temple.

Stop at one temple and continue the same rotary movement for the smoothing out of those laughing wrinkles which, if neglected, become crows' feet in time—keeping the ball a-rolling—continuing the moving rotation of circles across the forehead again and down to the other temple.

From each temple roll the ball into the outer corner of the eye, and gently roll it around first from left to right, and then from right to left, circling the eyeball. This will stimulate the circulation in the eyeball as well as around it, so that the eyes become more brilliant.

From the outer corner of the eye roll the little knobby ball in a diagonal path down the cheek to the corner of the mouth, allowing it to mould itself to every curve and hollow as it rolls along, keeping it held tightly so that the massage may be gentle though firm.

Give each side of the face equal manipulation unless there is some blemish on one side only, which requires extra attention. The two sides of many faces differ, but can be made alike thus.

Reduces Double Chin.

Roll the ball in the same rotary movement on each cheek, increasing the size of the circles to the full size of the cheek, to make them round, plump and rosy, first from left to right, and then vice versa. Finishing the face with a horizontal dash across the upper lip and back again, then round and round the mouth, bringing the rich red blood to the lips, and developing the muscles so as to make the lips appear more mobile—remembering always to keep the ball rolling.

To reduce a double chin, the ball should be rolled from ear to ear quite vigorously, also up and down from chin to neck. As this ball is entirely under the control of the user, it can be pressed lightly or heavily, as is required, in a circular movement, up and down, across and every way desired, leaving not a line or hollow of the face or figure unvisited by its stimulating and beautifying influence.

The development of the bust and curving beauties of the neck and shoulders is of prime importance to every woman. When the ball is used for this purpose it should follow the curves desired to be developed in order to enliven the muscles so that they will naturally do their own work. The circular movement of the rolling ball should be wide at first, then narrow down to small rotations which move along in larger circles, but always in the rotary movement.

There should also be a long, straight roll of the ball from the shoulder line until the ball meets a curve which it should follow, drawing gradually into a smaller and smaller circle, then wider again and running downward to the waist line.

The same movement should be followed out from a point under one arm to the same point under the other, from side to side, following the natural curves.

There should be a very nutritious skin developing food used after this massage.

As for all parts of the body which are suffering from superfluous flesh, a very vigorous massage with this same rolling, little bumpy electro-magnetic massage ball will, in connection with a following astringent, reduce materially. There is a liquid astringent with which one can paint one's-self at night, keeping it on all night, and washing the fat away with it in the morning. The fat melts as snow in the sun before such treatment.

An undesirable plumpness of the arms, hands, neck, shoulders, bust or abdomen can be self-treated in the privacy of home, with satisfaction and secrecy.

The heavy pressure reduces, and the light pressure develops. Hot water softens and cold water hardens. Relaxed muscles and flabby skin are made firm. Hollows are filled out. The curves of beauty appear as if by magic. The lines of age are literally rolled out, and the quickly coursing blood changes the nature and appearance of the sluggish skin from a pallid or sallow hue to clear pink and white. All blemishes disappear, and the rejuvenation is complete, and by nature's own methods.

The laughing dimples of youth once more take the place of the wrinkles of old age at the corners of the mouth, and superfluous flesh is rolled off from the shoulders and back of the neck, leaving only a dimple or so.

There is a noted beauty who claims that she can "make a dimple wherever she wants it," and she has proved it to the satisfaction of her friends.

Even the pale white ear lobe becomes a shell pink with the invigorating influence of stimulated circulation.

All nerves are forgotten, dull headaches disappear; all worries vanish as the mist before the sun, when health and beauty spring to life in the flesh in the marvelous rejuvenating process.

All of which takes about ten minutes night and morning, after the hot steam, and followed by a delicious skin food.

The beautiful model of the sketch declares that it even enlivens the hair. Be that as it may, every roll of this little magic electro-magnetic massage ball brings that charm of vigor and beauty which is the sceptre with which woman rules the world supreme.

claws of the brute passed through the back of her dress, and with a downward sweep tore open her back to the spine. With a gasp she sank to the floor, dead.

In another instant the tiger had drawn his long body to the rail of the box. With his tail lashing his sides in bewildered fury he gathered himself for a leap, and sprang full upon the body of one of the Countess's maids, who had fainted. The poor woman's heart was torn from her body with one sweep of the brute's paw.

By this time the stupefied attendants in the arena had gathered near, and with pistol shots and shouts had drawn the attention of the tiger.

Turning with snarling jaws toward the arena again, the beast sprang at the neck of the foremost attendant and bore him to the floor. As he sank his teeth into the man's throat the animal was overcome, and a pistol shot under his left shoulder killed him.

While the beautiful Countess and her attendant were being torn to death, an even more horrible scene was being enacted in the great amphitheatre. Nine thousand terrified men, women and children were crowding into the narrow exits, with the roars of the tiger ringing in their ears, and were trampling on each other in a wild rush for safety.

The crowd in the amphitheatre that day was the largest San Sebastian had ever seen. From miles around nobility, peasantry, soldiers and priests had come to see the bloody duel between tiger and bull, and when the first contest started not a seat was vacant. In view of the battle royal that was to follow, the opening events seemed dull and spiritless and the spectators grew impatient.

When at last the bull was led to the circular iron cage which had been erected in the centre of the amphitheatre the crowd cheered and leaned forward in their seats for a better view. There had been much betting, and the supporters of both animals eagerly noted their respective merits as they stood glaring at each other.

The tiger opened the battle. Crouching far at one side of the cage it sprang like a flash straight for the bull's throat. A stream of blood gushed forth where its claws sank into the bull's side.

A murmur of satisfaction ran through the crowd, and many cheered. The tiger had won first blood. It was going to be a great battle—the best, perhaps, ever seen in Spain. But the next instant the pleasure on every face turned to horror.

The infuriated bull caught the tiger, as it crouched to spring again, on the horns and tossed the animal with terrific force against the iron-barred door of the cage. A defective bar yielded, the lithe, tawny body slipped through the opening and fell into the arena. The tiger was loose!

For a moment the crowd sat mute and motionless, watching the tiger as it slowly gathered itself up. Then a cry of terror rang through the arena. The thousands sprang to their feet and pressed toward the exits, all animated by the desire to get out of reach of that long, sinewy body, with its terrible claws and its gleaming teeth.

The exits were too small for a crowd half the size of this, and the narrow passages leading to them were soon choked. When the weaker ones in front fell to the floor and blocked the way, the crowd behind fought and pushed the harder.

Social distinctions, regard for women and children—all were blotted out when they thought how horribly the tiger's claws had torn the bull's flesh. A brawny young peasant struck down with his fist a nobleman who stood in his way. A woman tore a diamond necklace from her throat and offered it to whoever would carry her to safety. Riches counted for nothing when the strong were fighting the weak for life itself.

Two soldiers, with drawn swords, threatened to kill the first man who entered the corridor leading to one of the exits, but they were helpless in the face of the thousands who fled from the beast which they had only recently been cheering. In vain the guards and a few cooler heads shouted that there was no danger. Even when the tiger's body was riddled with bullets the crowd pressed on as frantically as before.

Over an hour after the tiger had broken loose the last of the spectators left the building. The corridors behind them were drenched with blood and littered with the crushed and maimed. San Sebastian's gala day closed in gloom.

Just Like Her Mamma

"Mamma Was Happy After Her Divorce, So Was Grandma—Now I'm Going to Be."

The Emancipated Declaration of Lillian Russell's Daughter, Who Was So Carefully Reared to Escape Temptation.

THERE is a game called "Consequences" that children love to play as soon as they can handle pencil and paper. It is a game where everything happens as an inevitable consequence of something else.

Dorothy Russell Einstein probably played it many times before she came out of her New Jersey convent and began to play the greater game called Life in conjunction with it.

She is Lillian Russell's daughter and consequently——

"Well, people aren't a bit surprised that at nineteen years of age she has filed suit for divorce, asking that she may have and resume her maiden name.

But Lillian Russell made up her mind many years ago that Dorothy should be quite different. She made up her mind to baffle consequences, to overrule them, to override them, to obliterate them forever.

Her daughter should be an entirely different human being from what she had been. She should be brought up in the seclusion of a convent. She should wear a little uniform and dwell in the midst of holy thoughts and holy things. She should know nothing of theatres. She should live in the country, away from the excitement of a great city. She should fall in love some day, perhaps, when she was quite old enough to know her own mind, with some quiet man years older than herself, and settle down peacefully, happily, forever after, into domestic serenity.

"I have learned my lesson," said Dorothy Russell's mamma, "in the bitter battle of life, and my daughter shall be spared any such experience."

So it was arranged that Dorothy should be brought up just as though she were the daughter of some conventional matron of society; that Cupid should be kept from rioting with her heart for many, many years; that she should never, never go upon the stage; that she should inherit none of her lovely mamma's tendencies; that when she married the knot should be tied irrevocably; that such a thing as divorce—why Dorothy should be brought up so that she wouldn't know what divorce meant.

Thus Lillian Russell, the beautiful queen of comic opera, proceeded to baffle consequences—the consequences of inheritance or whatever philosophers may call it.

She pointed to daughter Dorothy with pride. The first step had been accomplished—she was a convent graduate, eighteen, demure, peaceful as a lamb.

"She's not a bit like her mamma," said the world. And they explained that her hair was darker and her eyes quite different.

"Not a bit like me," echoed Lillian Russell with satisfaction.

Then came the first hint of resemblance. "Yes," said Lillian's daughter, over the 'phone, "I'm married, quite suddenly. You see, love—no we didn't ask permission. Mamma did it, you know, when she was—er—eighteen."

"DAUGHTY" SHALL BE DIFFERENT.

Lillian sought to win in the game of consequences. She began years and years ago when Dorothy was a wee scrap of a girl. We may imagine just how she said to herself, "My daughter shall have the advantage of my experiences."

The fair Lillian's experiences began, as most of the theatrical world knows, a long time ago—in fact, if the chroniclers are exact, in 1879, when she was eighteen years of age.

She was as blond as now and they say not more beautiful. Her temptations were not to be her daughter's. At eighteen she fell in love with the man who directed her voice. Harry Braham was the leader of the orchestra. She was in the chorus.

But it is not our intention to follow the history of the fair Lillian except in so far as to show how, having been warned by experiences matrimonial and otherwise, she decided to spare her daughter.

Like hundreds of mothers the world over, off the stage as well as on, in every walk of life, she decided with a wise shake of her head to let her experiences suffice for both of them. "I have lived," she said, with the fear that dwells in every true mother's heart, "and I shall guard my little Dorothy so that she will know only happiness and peace."

Before she was twenty Lillian Russell had outgrown her place in the chorus and was standing in the front ranks as an opera singer. She had passed from a ballad singer at Tony Pastor's to a prima donna at the Casino. She had acquired fame and a new husband. Harry Braham was divorced and the father of the present Mrs. Dorothy Russell Einstein—Teddy Solomon, leader of the Casino Orchestra—was directing her voice and her heart.

Under his tuition she improved tremendously—developed in every way. She was in love, she said, and happy. She had no plans then for the little daughter in her cradle except that she should be as happy as her mother. Speaking of those days, Lillian Russell has said: "I thought love was eternal and that just to be alive meant happiness. Since then I have learned quite differently."

The awakening came suddenly when the father of Dorothy, who was born in London, England, in 1884, was suddenly accused of being a bigamist. For the second time Lillian Russell was in the divorce court. She had begun the experiences from which she vowed to shield her daughter.

A CONVENT LASS.

"Henceforth," she cried, "I will devote myself to my art and my little daughter."

"Daughty" her father had nicknamed her, and Daughty she was always called. "I have had my experiences," said Lillian Russell, "and Daughty shall profit by them."

Without doubt they have been varied enough for two, for the fair Lillian has been surrounded since first we heard her name with an army of admirers. But whenever on this green earth did mamma's experiences with mamma's admirers ever satisfy a daughter?

Undaunted Lillian Russell came out of the divorce court. "I have decided everything," she said. "I shall work, I shall sing, I shall bring my daughter up so that her life must be absolutely different from mine. To do this I must send her away from me—absolutely out of the atmosphere that surrounds me."

So it happened that "Daughty" was banished to a country region on the outskirts of Fort Lee, in New York. There, in a comfortable gray structure, known as the Institute of the Holy Angels, she lived, surrounded by gentle-voiced nuns from the time she was five years old. She wore a simple little black dress without flowers or [illegible]; she played in a garden hedged in by high green trees and great gray walls; she rose when the first bell rang at seven; she slept when the last bell rang at eight; she studied and played and ate and lived on time, apparently a happy little girl like thousands of other little girls.

She knew, they thought, in a vague way, about theatres, and that her mamma made her living in one of them. In fact, she was taken to see her mother act. Afterwards she was asked about it.

"I don't think I shall ever, ever go on the stage," she said, with an air of earnest conviction.

"Why not?" said some one.

"Ah, the life is such a hard one," answered Dorothy, "and the Sisters say they hope I never will, and mamma hopes so."

There was absolutely nothing to indicate that Dorothy would ever entertain a hope that was not her mamma's. She had been perfectly brought up within the convent walls, only coming out to spend her vacations with her mamma. On those occasions she was most carefully guarded, being taken only occasionally to the theatre, and being told only the things that it was good for her to know.

While Dorothy was in her earliest years at the convent her mamma's third matrimonial experience took place. Lillian Russell was singing in "Princess Nicotine," and John Chatterton, on the stage Signor Giovanni Perugini, was night after night talking love, singing love, looking love opposite to her.

At the end of a short time the fair Lillian had succumbed to love. At the end of a shorter time she had succumbed to disillusionment and another divorce.

"I blame nobody but myself," she said. "I tried to find happiness, and I failed. I have tried three times, and three times I have failed."

Miss Russell's third matrimonial venture took place over ten years ago, while Daughty was still a wee bit of a girl, with dresses above the tops of her boots.

But gradually behind the gray walls of her convent home Daughty was beginning to dream dreams that she confided to no one. The burden of them, she has confessed since, was, "Oh, that I may be like mamma."

HOW LIKE HER MOTHER.

Her mamma seemed to her, as she has to many people before and since her time, the most exquisite person she had ever seen on or off the stage. To be like her seemed to Dorothy to be perfection.

She came out of her convent gates at eighteen, adoring the Queen of Song. During the whole time she had been separated from her she had written to her every single day.

The Queen of Song now looked her over complacently. She was charming, well educated pretty and demure as a kitten. A thorough convent miss in every respect.

"She is absolutely unlike me," she said, "except, of course, that she has a talent for music."

It was decided that little Miss Dorothy should go abroad and study a while under the most careful guardianship and that she should be permitted just to peep at the world just enough to know that there was something bigger and gayer than Fort Lee.

She had come out of the convent with four gold medals and a diploma. It was high time for her to have a glimpse of the world. So Miss Dorothy sailed for Paris, whence news came over that she was studying and improving.

In May of the year 1903 "Daughtie" was met at the gangplank of a returning steamer by mamma. They stood together looking like sisters. They were to be together always. The Queen of Song had all sorts of plans for "Daughtie." She was going to take a new house in Fifty-seventh street, the house in which she now resides, by the way. She would fit it up beautifully and there "Daughtie" would live a quiet, sheltered life while mamma went on piling up experiences and warning her against them.

The lovely Queen of Song had thought it all out, and doubtless she said to "Daughtie" many a time a day, just as other mothers have said to other daughters, "If I had only had some one by whose experience I might have profited, I would have been spared much."

"Daughty" was still demure, but not quite so demure as when the convent gates had opened to let her and her diplomas out. However, she nodded gravely to all her mamma said, and no doubt she believed that she would be quite content to take her experiences second-hand.

This was in May. In August of the same year the astonishing news was made public that the demure little convent Miss had eloped and married.

Yes, it was true. Her husband was young Louis Einstein, the son of Benjamin F. Einstein, of the law firm of Einstein, Townsend & Gulterman, of New York.

"'Why, mamma was even younger than I when she married," said Mrs. Einstein demurely. "You couldn't expect me to be an old maid!"

"Ah, well," said the Queen of Song, "love was to be expected."

She bestowed her blessing and an apartment upon the young couple. She referred with pride to her married daughter.

"Ah, yes, a domestic life was after all to be desired, and although Daughty was a trifle young, still it was a good thing for her to have a husband to look after her."

The Queen of Song talked in this strain for a month or two, and then suddenly there came a discord, the first. It was a break in the domesticity of the young couple. Daughty was to go on the stage.

"Why, mamma did," said Daughty, with a laugh. "Why shouldn't I?" You see, I sing. And although I don't look like mamma, still I'm very like her."

"Yes," sighed the Queen of Song, "I guess she's very like me—very like."

And on the stage she went. Of course she had no difficulty in obtaining an engagement. She went first into vaudeville and then on the road with "The Girl from Kay's."

There were rumors that she was not happy, that like her mother she had drawn badly in the matrimonial market.

The rumors grew and finally exploded into facts. Lillian Russell's daughter has brought suit for divorce in the Chicago courts. A year and a half ago she was married. "I was obliged to support my husband," she says. "He collected my salary when I went on the stage and lived from the sale of my diamonds before I was working. I submitted to that, but when he kicked me, choked me and blackened my eyes I could stand it no longer.

"Mamma was happy after divorce, so was grandma after her separation; now I'm going to be."

Dorothy Russell is a strange mixture of ingenuousness and sophistication.

"Now that your step is taken," she was asked, "and your actual suffering is over do you regret the whole affair as an experience?"

"Oh, since it was to be," the trace of a line came with pretty seriousness between her eyes, "I'm so glad it is while I'm young. Later in life such things are hard to accept."

"My life was to have been different. Mamma had planned it quite otherwise. Poor mamma, she thought she could save me all sorts of experiences by just warning me and telling me with a sigh that she had been through them all herself. But I suppose every girl feels that she must see life for herself. Mamma was not willing that I should sing professionally without much study. I was to have three years abroad. But after a few months in London after the first Summer in Far Rockaway, L. I., where mamma and the Einsteins have country homes, I came back. It was Summer again and"—with a shrug—"that is all over.

"No, I never sang until after we were married. Mr. Einstein led me to think he was interested in my future—that it depended upon my going at once on the stage.

"Then I found out that he was only concerned about my salary, which he collected and spent for drinks and dinners at the cafes.

"He was to be a lawyer. He was very brilliant that way, and had all but taken his final examinations for the bar after graduating at Andover and the New York Law School. I knew his father had money, although I didn't expect him to support us. But I didn't think Louis would be so lazy.

"After I went into vaudeville he made fun of me and told me I had no ability. He would stand in the wings and say insulting things to me while I was on. He was always there to annoy me, but he left me alone for nights at a time while he caroused. He had a fearful temper and was intoxicated half the time.

"I tried for over a year to submit to it all, to think he was only young and considered it was 'smart' to tyrannize, but there was a limit to my endurance."

"Does he write you imploringly?" she was asked last week just after she had begun suit for divorce.

"Oh, yes. He can't imagine what's the matter. He says he's always loved me, and won't I come back, and won't I send him some money to come to me; and don't I remember the time when we were so 'broke' in New York and he stuck to me?"

"And how did he stick, Miss Russell?"

"By speculating on the diamonds he took from me."

"You were not willing he should have the diamonds?"

"The first two or three he persuaded me to give up without much trouble. He said he would redeem them in a month or two and that it was only to tide us over.

"A year ago last Christmas mamma asked me what one of my rings I would like to have back. She intended to get them all for me, one by one. I told her the big turquoise with the diamond setting.

"She went to Abbott and asked him how much he needed to redeem it. He said it was in pawn for $200 and the interest on it was $50. Mamma gave him the $250 and he didn't come for two days.

"When I finally saw him I said 'Well, did you get my ring?' and he told me the turquoise had been scratched and Tiffany was fixing it. I must wait a few days. I've been waiting ever since and I've never seen the ring."

"And you hear from your mother?" she was asked.

"I had a long letter from her this morning. She says my room and my maid are ready for me, and she wants me as soon as I can come and as long as I can stay."

"And as for marriages, do you read into your future?"

"I don't want any more experiences of that sort. I can never believe in a man again. If I marry some time after I have made my reputation as an artist"—this next only half seriously—"well, I shall marry for money, I think.

"Somebody who will support me and tell me I don't need to work any more. But I believe I won't talk about marriage."

In her suit for divorce Mrs. Einstein alleges that during all the time she lived with the defendant she treated him kindly and affectionately, and in all things at all times conducted herself toward the said defendant in a manner well becoming a good, true and affectionate wife. This is legal, not loving.

Immediately following the service of papers upon him, young Mr. Einstein came from New York to Chicago to see his wife. There, it is said, on her refusal to receive him, he threatened to kill her. His arrest and jailing followed. The most sensational of experiences had come into the life of the girl whose mamma had willed that she should have none.

His release from jail followed quick on her release from him, when she fled from Chicago to St. Louis to be free as a bird on the wing.

The Queen of Song is very sad about Daughty's divorce. Perhaps she fears it may be the beginning of a series of Cupid's freaks in the rollicking game which she has played of "Now You're Married and Now You're Not."

For it seems that in spite of all—education, environment and mamma's experiences—Daughty is just like her mamma.

How the Cunningest Fox of All Swindlers Got His Nose in the Trap at Last.

After Many Marvellous Escapes, Alonzo J. Whiteman, the Terror of Bank Officials, Is Nabbed in a Secret Passage of His Mother's House.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 9.

SLIPPERY as an eel fresh caught, the despair of detectives, through whose fingers he has wriggled a dozen times, anathematized by prosecuting attorneys who could not hold him with their legal learning when he had been captured, Alonzo J. Whiteman, most resourceful of bank swindlers, scholar, lawyer, preacher, politician, has at last been landed in the Erie County Jail here on a charge which it is hoped this time will send him to the penitentiary.

He is a graduate of Hamilton College and of the Columbia Law School, New York. He was an Alderman and the "Richard Croker" of Duluth, Minn., where he became a millionaire in legitimate business; he became an Assemblyman and Senator in that State, and helped nominate Grover Cleveland for President of the United States.

In the meantime he has become one of the most notorious and sensational swindlers in the country. Pinkerton's Detective Agency declares that he has been arrested twenty times; that seventeen indictments have been found against him; that he has been tried four times; sentenced to an aggregate of sixteen years; had been held in jail for over three years awaiting trial, and out of all this he has only served one year of actual sentence, always defeating the detectives and gaining his liberty.

For a Clever Forgery.

The particular crime with which Whiteman is charged this time by the Buffalo police and the Pinkertons occurred early in July, when a messenger called at the Fidelity Trust Company in Buffalo with a letter typewritten on what purported to be the business paper of an East Aurora, N. Y., land company, and signed "F. H. Hubbard," who appeared to be a member of the firm. Enclosed in the letter was a draft for $9,000 to Hubbard's order by the cashier of the National Hudson River Bank, Hudson, N. Y., on the Leather Manufacturers' Bank of New York City. The letter expressed the wish of Mr. Hubbard to open an account with the bank, stating that Mr. Hubbard was an invalid who seldom left East Aurora, and requested that a bank check book be sent by return messenger. The draft was accepted. The amount of $9,000 was credited to Mr. Hubbard. Then, after allowing sufficient time for the draft to pass through the usual channels, the Fidelity Trust Company allowed Mr. Hubbard to check on the account.

Alonzo J. Whiteman, the Famous Swindler.

The Pinkertons and the police of Buffalo claim that Alonzo Whiteman and Joseph Boothman, another noted forger, had conducted the transaction. Joseph Boothman was arrested a short time later. He is now in the same jail with Whiteman. Boothman is charged by the police with being a member of the Whiteman-Knox band of bank swindlers. At the time Boothman was arrested Whiteman had fled from the city.

On September 26 Whiteman was arrested in the streets of St. Louis just as he was about to board a street car with a handsome young woman. He submitted to arrest quietly. He agreed to return to Buffalo, denying any knowledge of the bank swindle. Detectives Al Solomon, of the Buffalo force, and Fields, of the Pinkertons, went to St. Louis. They got Whiteman. He seemed perfectly willing to return. The two detectives brought their man to Chicago and had no trouble. Things were going nicely until Dunkirk, N. Y., was reached. Dunkirk is fifty miles from Buffalo. There the train stopped. The two detectives got off the train to limber up a bit. Whiteman was in between them.

Jumped from the Window of a Car.

When the train was about to start first one of the sleuths got aboard, then Whiteman and then followed the second detective.

As Whiteman reached the stateroom door the trio were occupying he quickly stepped in. Instantly the door slammed. The detectives thought it was by mere accident. Then the train started. The detectives were on one side of the door and Whiteman on the other—they thought. But Whiteman was gone. He had jumped through the window of the moving train and made his escape.

The train was solid vestibule. When the detectives realized that Whitman had flown from their grasp the train was going fifty miles an hour. The next station was reached in twenty minutes. They got off and hurried back to Dunkirk, but all trace of Whiteman had vanished.

Whiteman says that when he jumped through the window he mingled with the crowd on the platform and after the train drew away he went back to the Erie Hotel and there registered. He went to bed and slept soundly until the next morning. When he arose he says he was surprised to find that Detectives Solomon and Fields had returned to the hotel, too, and had occupied rooms on the same floor with him. Whiteman says he quietly walked into the dining room in the morning, took breakfast and then boarded a train and rode to Dansville, N. Y., his home.

Townspeople Protected Him.

All this time the detectives were searching everywhere for him. Every city in the country was told to watch for him. Whiteman says that when he reached Dansville he met Linn Bruce, now Lieutenant-Governor, and talked with him. While the country was wondering what had happened to him, he was at his mother's home, and for two weeks he walked the streets of Dansville.

Then he went to Mexico. After a few weeks in that country he came back to Dansville. He stayed until after Christmas, and then went South. Again he returned home. He says that all this time he was travelling within sight of the detectives, and still they never caught him.

Whiteman's father was one of the oldest residents of Dansville. He made over a million dollars with his paper mills there. He was respected by everybody, and so, too, was his son. The people of Dansville absolutely refuse, men, women and children, to believe that Whiteman is a swindler or a criminal in any way. They claim that detectives are trying to hound him to death. In Dansville Whiteman is as free to walk the streets as any man that ever lived. There the people would stick by him through thick and thin.

His mother, a woman of remarkable musical abilities and of splendid education, is the leading society light. When the arrest of Whiteman occurred in St. Louis the people of Dansville were up in arms. They claimed that he was wronged. Business men offered him all the financial assistance he might need. When his escape from the train at Dunkirk occurred, the Dansville people were glad. They said Whiteman was "straight," and that nothing could land him in prison.

When the Pinkertons, seven in number, and six Buffalo detectives got the tip that Whitman was at his mother's home they armed themselves heavily and went to catch him. They stole into the town in the dead of night. So strong are the people of Dansville for Whiteman that when a stranger entered the town he was immediately notified of their presence. So the detectives stole a march on him and his stanch townspeople. They walked into town and then surrounded the house.

His Mother Shielded Him.

When two of the detectives rapped on the front door Mrs. Whiteman, Alonzo's mother, answered. When she saw the detectives she slammed the door in their faces. Then a buzzer rang. Alonzo, asleep on the top floor, was aroused. Mrs. Whiteman and the servants all arose and dressed fully before allowing the detectives to enter the house. This was in order to give her son time to dress and escape. But all avenues of escape were cut off. When the detectives entered the house Mrs. Whiteman said her son was not there. In every corner the detectives searched, but no Alonzo did they find.

They were finally compelled to give up and were about to leave when one of them discovered a secret opening in the wall of a room in a secluded part of the house. This opening was on a chute which extended through the roof into what, from the outside, looked like a chimney. The detectives concluded that Whiteman was in the part of the chute above the roof, and two immediately went up there, leaving a guard inside and all about the house outside.

Just as the detectives reached the roof Whiteman scrambled out of the chute and stood at bay, facing two cocked revolvers. It looked like a fight. Suddenly the swindler slipped on the ice-coated shingles and slid down to the eaves. For a few moments he hung by his fingers twenty-five feet above the ground, where other detectives were waiting for him.

Captured in a Snowdrift.

Wishing to take their man alive, the detectives on the roof went cautiously toward him, but before they could reach the man's hands his fingers relaxed and he fell.

Fortunately for him, there was a deep snowdrift beneath. Into this he plunged out of sight, and immediately four detectives were on top of him. Before he could rise he was safely handcuffed.

The House of Whiteman's Mother, Where He Was Captured.

Even then Whiteman expected to outwit the detectives. He wanted to send for his attorney. If Whiteman had been allowed to do so the detectives say that he would have been hauled before a justice of the peace there in Dansville at that hour of the night and held there, where all were his friends. But without giving him time to dress they hustled him into a sleigh and drove him over the county line. The detectives had their revolvers drawn all the time, because they say that if the people of Dansville were aroused and learned that Whiteman was being taken away they would have mobbed the detectives and rescued him.

With his attorneys, E. W. McIntyre and Dolson, present, Whiteman saw a correspondent of this newspaper in his cell on Sunday afternoon. It took four hours before Whiteman would agree to see the reporter.

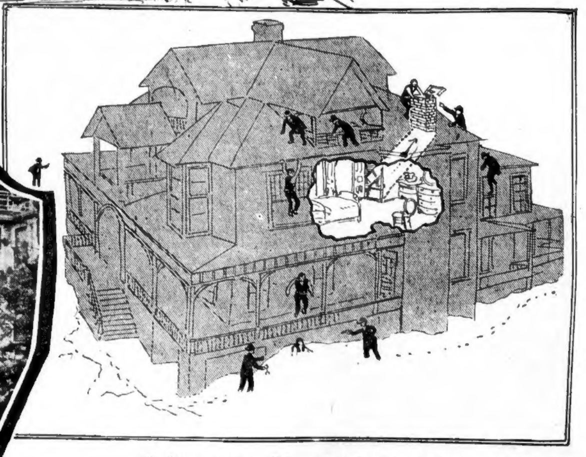
He was smiling and laughed as he spoke.

"Every time I hav been arrested within the past four or five years they've always classed me as the ex-Mayor of Duluth. That's not so. I was elected Alderman of the First Ward in the city of Duluth in 1883. I served one term. I lived in the Second Ward just before election. I moved into the First Ward just to beat a certain Republican, and I did it. After that I was Assemblyman, and I served two years in the State Senate.

"The swelled head was really my downfall in politics. I wanted to go to Congress. My people told me to go back to the Senate. I was young—only in my thirtieth year then, but I wanted to be a Congressman. I ran against Halvorson for the nomination and was defeated.

"I was chairman of the Democratic State Committee for two years. I was a delegate-at-large in 1888 to the Democratic National Convention when we nominated Grover Cleveland for President. Then I tional Convention, in 1892, when Grover Cleveland again received the nomination.

"Let me say this, Grover Cleveland is a dear friend of mine. I will say no more."



The diagram shows how Whiteman escaped to the roof of his mother's house through a secret chute ending in what appeared to be a chimney. Emerging, and confronted by detectives, he slid down the slope of the roof, and, after clinging for a moment to the eaves, fell 25 feet to the ground, landing unhurt in a snowdrift, where other detectives pounced on him.

"It is true that you became a preacher a few years ago, when you got back to Dansville, after some trouble in the West, is it not?"

"Yes, I did decide to turn preacher for a time. I had quite a gathering in Dansville. I guess I would have made good if I had stuck to it. I didn't, though."

"Why did you quit?"

"Because I found I did not like it. I was telling too much. A man like myself wants to talk but very little."

"Is it true that you have been offered $5,000 by old friends in Duluth to help you out of this trouble?"

For answer Whiteman pulled from his pocket a letter. It was from a prominent man in Duluth. The signature had been torn off. The writer of the missive offered Whiteman a loan of $5,000 and said that the sum could be doubled for the asking.

"I could sit down there and pen a letter and get $25,000 in cash by return mail if I cared to.

"The bail of $10,000, which holds me here, could be produced in twenty four hours by the friends of my family in Dansville."

In Denver, in 1890, Whiteman is supposed to have swindled a bank out of $5,000. He got the money in gold. The money was tied up in a belt around his waist. He had two hand bags. He was walking along the street when he was caught by two Pinkerton men. Whiteman was being taken to the station, when suddenly he threw the hand bags into an open doorway. The two detectives let go of Whiteman and made for the hand bags. In a twinkling he was off.

In Helena, Mont., Whiteman owed a board bill in a hotel. One night the proprietor took all his clothes, telling him that they would be returned to him when he saw fit to pay the bill. After a short wait Whiteman rang the call bell. When a bell boy entered Whiteman grabbed him, gagged him and threw the boy on a bed, took his clothes, dressed in them, left his room, walked out of the hotel and disappeared.

Whiteman's first arrest occurred on July 15, 1894, at Detroit, Mich. He was taken into custody for forging the name of Frank Dixon to a check for $500, drawn on the Importers and Traders' National Bank of New York City, and passed the same on J. D. Maxwell, of San Francisco. After considerable legal fighting, in which the Governors of California and Michigan became involved in a wrangle over extradition papers, Whiteman was finally taken to San Francisco. There he was tried. But by some mysterious method, gained his liberty on his own recognizance.

Whiteman then began to boast that the police could not trap him in any of his operations. Pretty soon he began to travel about under a score of aliases. Suddenly he started across the country and was followed everywhere he went by detectives. The banking houses throughout the country began to fear him. They were unable to detect the forgeries he was known to have perpetrated.

In March, 1897, men of the New York Detective Bureau arrested Whiteman. He was charged with swindling the Columbia Bank, of New York City, out of $580, supposedly by means of a raised draft. Again Whiteman proved himself too clever for the police. He managed to prove an absolute alibi and gained his freedom. He mockingly nodded to the detectives as he passed out of court.

Whiteman, according to the detectives, left New York and went back to Chicago in 1898. He was soon afterward arrested; this time charged with obtaining $1,000 from a bank in that city. This time the detectives apparently had Whiteman hard and fast. The knowledge he had of the law and his abilities that saved him in former cases fell flat on this occasion. He was tried and the court convicted him. He was sentenced to serve two years in the Chicago House of Correction. But always a fighter when his liberty was at stake, Whiteman had the case carried into the higher court. For a full month he fought it in the Supreme Court. Finally he was liberated, but only after he had spent several months in jail.

In these cases Whiteman's accomplices were arrested and convicted. And now, at last, his own turn seems to have come.

WELL WHAT DO YOU GUESS?

Miss Alice Roosevelt Is Made the Subject of a Very Interesting Guessing Match in Paris by "Femina," the Famous French Magazine for Women.

Paris, Feb. 5, 1905.

PRESIDENT Roosevelt's daughter has set the town guessing. From end to end of Paris people speculate about the choice of Alice Roosevelt. "Well, who's your guess?" they ask one another.

Of course Miss Roosevelt never intended for a moment to put so serious a person as her future husband up for discussion, but as soon as it was announced that she was going abroad wiseacres put their heads together and said, "What for?"

Some of these wiseacres happened to be on the editorial staff of Femina, one of our French weekly papers. "We know what she is coming abroad for," they said. And forthwith they admitted the public to their confidence by announcing a guessing contest, with a handsome prize for the best guesser.

"Who will Miss Roosevelt marry?" it is called.

Ladies and gentlemen, please send in your answers. Will the lucky man be Prince Michel Alexandrowitch of Russia? Or Prince Eitel Frederick of Prussia? Or Prince George of Greece? Or Prince Gustave Adolphe of Sweden? Or Paul Loubet, son of the President of France? Or Prince Adalbert, third son of the Emperor of Germany?

The picture of the daughter of the President of the United States is printed quite as if she were a member of some royal reigning family surrounded by all these famous and royal persons.

"Messieurs et mesdames—faites vos choix—make your choice. Who in your opinion is most likely to win the hand of the first young lady of America? Send in your lists. The candidates should be arranged in the order of preference and the guesser who comes nearest to the vote of the majority will receive a beautiful bag made of the finest raised leather. So says Femina.

THE CHOICE OF A HUSBAND.

All sorts of stories are abroad to account for the guessing contest. The one that gains the greatest credence tells of a dream that came to Miss Roosevelt herself. Possibly she confided it to her most intimate of intimate friends, and possibly this most intimate friend had in her turn a friend—well, there's no use in trying to account for it—here's the story:

It seems that Miss Roosevelt went to sleep one night after some great function at which as the President's daughter she had been specially honored. Perhaps it was after she had christened the Kaiser's yacht, standing next to the Kaiser's brother, or perhaps it was after her triumphal tour through Cuba; or after some public demonstration in Porto Rico; or it may have been with the cheers of the St. Louis people ringing in her ears. Whatever it was, according to the story, the little lady fell asleep and, sleeping, she dreamed a dream. It seemed to her, so the story goes, one of the most beautiful of dreams.

She was herself just a simple American girl, like hundreds and thousands of other American girls. She hadn't changed her identity the least bit in the world, as one is apt to do in dreams. Her father was still the President of the United States, having been re-elected to office, and she was his daughter.

But the wonderful and entrancing part of the dream was that she, the little American girl, was surrounded by the highest nobles and princes of Europe, each one petitioning for the honor of her hand and bowing low before her.

It was all just as realistic as a dream may be, except that on their heads or in their hands each one carried the insignia of his rank.

"The crown of Sweden! A palace at Potsdam! Rank next to the Czarina!" Princes of Greece and Prussia and Russia were kneeling before her; crowned heads were bowed to the dust. She was surrounded by them, they pressed close about her, they petitioned her. She lifted her voice to speak—and awoke.

Now, just what she would have said had she not awakened her most intimate friend has not revealed. Perhaps she didn't tell her. Perhaps she doesn't know herself.

One thing, it is declared, is certain. Alice Roosevelt was presented, in her dream, of course, with a choice of the royal youths of Europe, and it didn't give her nightmare.

Upon that dream Femina, it is said, has built its contets. Who among the princes of Europe would make the best husband for Alice Roosevelt?

Paul Loubet, the son of the President of France, is mentioned as one of the possible fiances, probably because of his popularity. He is twenty-seven, not rich, but extremely good looking, with blue eyes, intelligent and keen, like his father.

Like his father, he is extremely independent, but he cares much more for the exactions and fashions of dress. For instance, he would never in the world wear false cuffs or a tie sewn together and attached by a clasp. These little idiosyncrasies are peculiarities of his father, but Miss Roosevelt need not be a bit afraid that Paul Loubet will indulge in any of them. He is the pink of perfection as far as his manners and his costumes are concerned. But he is not rich, and President Loubet's private fortune is said not to exceed $100,000. To marry Paul Loubet it is quite obvious that one must love him for his qualities, not for his fortune. Eh, Mademoiselle Roosevelt? She may find out easily that his chief source of revenue is from his father in return for his services as secretary. Is she coming to Europe to make a love match?

WHO IS THE LUCKY MAN?

Femina does not answer. Pass on to the next. Le choix—the choice is yours, ladies and gentlemen.

Two Prussian princes stand out as desirable. There is something so solid and reassuring about a Prussian prince. The heir to the throne is otherwise engaged, as all the world knows, to the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, but the Kaiser's other sons are not to be sneered at. There are two of them whom Femina asks you to consider—Prince Eitel Friedrich and Prince Adalbert, the second and third sons, one twenty-two and the other twenty.

These young men Miss Roosevelt may be assured have been splendidly brought up with the sort of Spartan training that the Emperor approves for all young men. All their lives they have risen at 5:30 and been at their tasks by 8 o'clock. Now, of course, they are their own masters, but the effects of their training are none the less apparent, as the Emperor hoped they might be.

Prince Eitel is the student of the family, and Prince Adalbert the athlete, "Our sailor boy," the Germans call him. He was placed on the roll of the marines as a sub-lieutenant when six years old and has served as any other sailor on a training ship. All the Emperor's sons are soldiers. They carry themselves with the erect splendor of the best Prussian officers. Prince Adalbert is perhaps the better looking, but Prince Eitel is the elder, and in royal families the difference of even a few minutes means a great deal, maybe a kingdom. If the Crown Prince were to die without issue Prince Eitel would be heir apparent, therefore—Well, choose as you will, but first cast your eye down the list of other candidates.

Prince Michel Alexandrowitch, brother of the Czar, no longer heir apparent since the birth of the Czar's son, is none the less a worthy suitor. He is a typical Russian in appearance and manner, but he is only twenty-six, and if he were to marry an American he might, as it were, be made over. He is rich and intelligent, two very good qualities even when one comes a wooing out of a palace and when one may refer by permission to one's brother—the Czar.

Now, as to Miss Roosevelt—she has, as as far as Prince Michel is concerned, two things in her favor. She is not a Catholic and she is not a relative. Many a girl has married on less. When there was a possibility of his becoming King, of course, he could only marry a princess—some one of equal rank—but now—well, what do you say?

But wait a minute. Here is a crown prince, a real heir apparent—Gustav Adolph of Sweden. Already the Swedish newspapers have announced Alice Roosevelt as a possible bride for the eldest son of the eldest son of King Oscar.

"An American wife with good common sense and independence is just the thing," says the court chronicle of Sweden. "It would be a splendid move for Sweden and for Gustav Adolph."

The Crown Prince is twenty-two, which is quite the right age for Miss Alice, who is barely twenty. He is tall and athletic like his grandfather and as democratic as a foreign prince should be, even to be mentioned as a possible suitor for a broad-minded American girl.

STILL TIME TO VOTE.

But the votes are not in yet and still another good name is on the list of competitors. Prince George of Greece, the second son of King George, and the only really popular member of his family deserves consideration. He is at present High Commissioner of Crete and for some years—he is now thirty-five—he has been called the hero of a hopeless romance. He is said to love the Princess Victoria of Wales, the King's daughter, but hopelessly. They are cousins and, according to the laws of the Greek Church, which Prince George is bound to respect, they may not wed. So, as their attachment is hopeless, on the list of possible aspirants for the hand of Miss Alice Roosevelt appears the name of the Greek prince.

Six of the most interesting names in Europe thus surround the President's daughter, and all Paris is busy guessing whose will draw the prize. Those who are interested in the matter declare that it is quite natural that a girl of twenty, in the position that Miss Roosevelt holds, should, during the next four years of her father's administration, emphasize her presence at the White House with a wedding.

If she marries into one of the royal families, think what such a celebration would mean! What presents! What fetes! The attention of the entire civilized world would be upon her. Paris is intensely sympathetic to her, and Femina realizing this has offered her hand.

"Imagine," say her sympathizers, "how hard it will be for her after having tasted all the delights of being constantly honored and glorified and applauded and complimented, suddenly to take a back seat and sink into obscurity. Only the right sort of marriage may prevent this. "Let us do what we can to help!" And with the greatest enthusiasm they enter into the choice of a husband for the daughter of the great American Republic.

Why should not Miss Roosevelt take as high a position, for instance, as her countrywoman, the Duchess of Marlborough? Or as a dozen other American woman with half her position who have married titles abroad? It would actually seem as though the whole of Paris were looking to Miss Roosevelt to do something notable, something worthy of her career at the White House and worthy of their interest in her career in the future.

If the choice of a husband, settled by popular vote in gay Paris, does nothing else for the President's daughter at least it will make her as well known on the other side of the water as on this. And perhaps, too, it will embolden the young princes whose names are on the list to come forward.

They may never have thought of Miss Roosevelt as a possible consort—they may never have heard of her. Who can tell? But now—well, good luck to the man, whoever he may be, who wins the hand of the President's daughter.

Haunted by the Ghosts of 4 Murdered Czars

IMAGINATION cannot conceive a more dreadful situation than that of the present Czar of Russia, as he sits and broods over the murders of his predecessors on the throne.

Four Czars have been assassinated and in every case members of the imperial family have been more or less directly implicated in the crime. The murdered Czars were:

1. Peter III., strangled by order of his wife, Catherine the Great, July 17, 1762.

2. Ivan VI., killed mysteriously in the dungeon of Schlusselburg Castle, December 5, 1764.

3. Paul I., strangled by his courtiers, March 23, 1801.

Alexander II., blown to pieces by the Nihilists, with the connivance of his family and the court party, March 13, 1881.

Nicholas II. is bound to think over these murders. He has little else to do. Feeble, sickly, nerve-wracked, visionary, characterless, he hesitates to take any decided course of action and shuts himself up with his terrors. Whether in the vast Winter Palace at St. Petersburg or the gloomy Castle of Gatchina, or in the pleasant Summer Palace of Sarskoe-Selo, they are always with him.

He thinks over the similarity between his own situation and that of his murdered ancestors. He has reason to do so. Every one of these tragedies has some feature that applies to his own case. The same relatives who participated in the assassination of his grandfather, Alexnder II., to-day surround the present Czar, threatening him with death if he yields to the rising tide of liberalism. The same type of courtiers and officers who strangled his great grandfather, Paul, and his remote ancestor, Peter III., have free access to him and are ready to kill him like a dog the moment it suits their desperate game.

The ghosts of the dead haunt him. He sits for hours in silence, brooding moodily. He starts up at the slightest sound and sometimes at none at all, as if he heard the dead men gibber and squeak.

Death surrounds him in countless shapes. He can say with the psalmist more truly than any man alive: "The sorrows of hell compassed me about, and the snares of death prevented me."

The horror of his position is that he fears death and treachery from every quarter. The commonest soldier in Manchuria has a happier lot compared to his. The soldier has only to fear the bullets of the Japanese, a very definite danger. The Czar is not alone in danger from the bullets and bombs of Nihilists and other radical opponents of his government. He has cause to suspect that the uncle, who comes to make an afternoon call, intends to kill him at the same time. His own mother is in league with those who are determined at any cost to prevent him from making liberal concessions. He fears that the officers who guard his palace will enter his bedroom in the dead of night and choke him to death, as they did his ancestors. He is uncertain whether the cup of coffee his wife hands him is poisoned or not. He knows that the floor of the room where he plays with his children may be charged with dynamite and that he and all of them may be blown to eternity at any moment.

The history of the Czars is one long welter of blood and horror from the days of Ivan the Terrible to the present. That despot killed his own son, the Czarewitch, in a fit of rage with a great iron bar, which he always carried to chastise those who displeased him. Peter the Great tortured his oldest son, also a Czarewitch, to death for an unproved offence. Peter was also guilty of another atrocity. He sat at table and beheaded twenty of the Strelitz, a rebellious military company, as they were brought before him with their hands tied behind their backs. He alternately ate and drank and wielded the bloody axe.

Assassination a Habit.

After Peter's time the assassination of Czars became a habit. The uncertainty in which he left the succession to the throne had much to do with these tragedies. Infamous women rulers and their favorites played an extraordinary part in them. There was constant intrigue for the throne or for power, and the men and women of the Russian Court never hesitated at murder when anything was to be gained. Peter named as his successor his low-born wife, Catherine I. She only survived [illegible] two years, and was followed [illegible] his grandson, Peter II., son of the Czarewitch, who was tortured to death. Poor little Peter II. reigned two years and died at the age of fourteen. He was followed by his cousin, the Empress Anna, niece of Peter the Great. She had a scandalous reign of ten years, during which the country was ruled by her favorite, Biron.

Anna chose for her successor her grand-nephew, Ivan VI., son of the Duchess Anna of Brunswick. It was Ivan's fate to be deposed by one Empress—Elizabeth—and to be murdered by another—Catherine. His deposition comes early in the story; his murder is postponed until after that of another Czar.

Ivan was proclaimed Czar [illegible] 1740. He was an infant and his mother, the weak and helpless Anna of Brunswick, acted as regent. She was hated for many reasons, and the ambitious, unscrupulous and immoral Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Peter the Great, plotted to seize the throne. [illegible] was the only descendant of that [illegible] in Russia and had great prestige with Russians. She won the soldiers of the Imperial Guard to her side by bribery, by drinking with them and by many extraordinary tricks.

On the night of December 6, 1741, Elizabeth went to the barracks of the famous Preobajensky Regiment, took up a musket and addressed the soldiers:

"My children, you know whose daughter I am! It is my resolve this night to deliver you and all Russia from German tormentors. Will you follow me?"

"Matushka!" they cried. "We will follow thee to the death, and as for the Germans, we will cut them all to pieces!"

At the head of the soldiers Elizabeth then marched to the Winter Palace and siezed the Regent Anna and her son, the infant Czar Ivan, in their beds. That was the end of poor Ivan's reign and the beginning of Elizabeth's. She was the fifth ruler Russia had had in the sixteen years that had passed since the death of her father, Peter the Great.

How the Present Emperor of Russia Hides in His Palace Dreading Lest History Will Again Repeat Itself.

Elizabeth at first sent the deposed Czar, and the rest of the family, to the gloomy Castle of Schlusselburg, on the Gulf of Finland. They were half starved and treated with the greatest cruelty. But even this treatment was not considered severe enough. Elizabeth deliberately planned to drive the child insane, so that he might never be able to regain the crown which she had stolen from him.

The Empress ordered that Anna and her husband, Prince Anthony of Brunswick, should be transported to the Solovetsky Monastery, on an island in the Arctic Ocean, a few miles from Archangel. When they arrived at the coast the state of the ice made it impossible to cross over to the island, and finally Elizabeth decided to let them stay in a village on the mainland. They lived here in a hut like savages, and after two years the Princess Anna died literally of misery.

All this time the torture of the young Czar, Ivan VI., was continued. He was confined in a dungeon where the sun never entered. Its stone walls and floors were kept constantly damp by the sea, which came within a few feet of it. His jailers were chosen for their sullenness and brutality. They were ordered on pain of death not to teach him to read or permit any one else to do so. His only companions were rats and bats and other noisome things. Under these conditions he grew up idiotic and half blind.

Now the Empress Elizabeth had named as her successor her nephew, Peter, the son of her sister Anna, who had married the German Duke of Holstein-Golltorp. He is the direct ancestor in the male line of the present Czar. He had been brought to live in Russia as heir to the throne and received the title of Grand Duke Peter. The principal event in his life was his marriage to the Princess Catherine of Anhalt-Zerbst, afterward known as Catherine the Great and "the Semiramis of the North."

Peter was well meaning but foolish and drunken. His wife was the cleverest woman in Russia. She was married solely for state reasons and from the first had nothing but loathing for him. Early in her married life she was implicated in a plot against the Empress Elizabeth, but escaped by presence of mind and skilful lying.

Elizabeth died in 1762 and Peter III. succeeded to her throne. His behavior in the funeral chamber, where his aunt's corpse lay, was disgusting. "He was seen whimpering and laughing with the ladies-in-waiting, turning the priests into ridicule and picking quarrels with the officers," writes the Princess Dashkof.

Peter III.'s Deposition.

His wife, Catherine, had already a group of devoted followers consisting of reckless young officers of the guard. Chief among these was Gregory Orlof, the first of her long line of favorites, who have become famous in history. Orlof was of remarkable size and physical strength and he had two brothers similarly gifted.

Peter had talked of divorcing Catherine and marrying Elizabeth Vorontsof and of making and deposed Ivan VI. his heir. Catherine decided to depose Peter. With the help of the Orlofs and three regiments of guards, who had been won over to her side, she seized the government and proclaimed herself Empress. Then at the head of twenty thousand soldiers she marched on Ovanienbaum, twenty miles from St. Petersburg, where Peter was, and surrounded the palace. He tried to break through the cordon.

"I am the Czar," he said to Admiral Talnisin, who was on Catherine's side.

"There is no longer any Czar," replied the Admiral.

Under the circumstances Peter consented to abdicate. He was immediately sent under guard to the prison of Ropteha, near St. Petersburg. There, as we shall see, an excuse was found for murdering him within four days.

As soon as Catherine had possession of the government, she rewarded her accomplices magnificently. The chief favorite, Gregory Orlof, was made lieutenant-general of the Russian armies and Knight of St. Alexander Nevski. His brothers were ennobled. To the officers of the guards, who had assisted in the revolution, twenty-four estates, including the absolute ownership of about 30,000 serfs, were granted. Brandy and beer were freely distributed among the soldiers.

Catherine and her accomplices indulged in the most unbridled orgies. All night long the Winter Palace resounded with the shouts and shrieks of the drunken revellers. They alternately quarrelled and embraced, and toward morning the servants picked them up helpless and carried them to their apartments.

On the third day after the revolution a drunken soldier of the guards, one of those who had enjoyed Catherine's bounty, rushed among his comrades and cried:

"I have dreamed that our Empress is being carried off by the Holsteiners and Prussians!" (He referred to Czar Peter's soldiers and followers.)

The soldiers were so excited that they insisted on seeing Catherine at once and assuring themselves that she was all right. About the same time alarming news came from Moscow and other places outside of St. Petersburg that the people were disaffected to Catherine and regarded Peter as their rightful sovereign.

The Empress and her boon companions debated the situation. Alexis Orlof, who was savage and morose at the end of a long debauch, exclaimed:

"Your Majesty and all of us will not be safe as long as this brute lives!"

"He is right," chorused the others.

The Empress Catherine bowed her head.

Peter III. is Strangled to Death.

The same day Alexis Orlof and six followers went out to Ropteha. The Russian historian Karamsin tells the horrible story of what followed. Orlof announced to Peter that he was to be released and permitted to retire to Germany and live in tranquillity there.

"I have come to dine with you to celebrate your release, according to our Russian custom," said Orlof.

While Orlof chatted with the Czar, one of his accomplices, an officer named Teploff, poured out wine and mixed poison in the Czar's glass. Peter took it without suspicion. Immediately he felt terrible pains in his stomach. He knew that an attempt was being made to poison him. He cried out for milk. A faithful French valet came to his help. The conspirators threw the valet out of the room. Then they mixed a stronger glass of poison and offered it to Peter.

"You will save us a lot of trouble by taking it," said Orlof.

Peter refused and continued to shriek for help. The conspirators threw him to the ground. Orlof knelt on his chest and put his hands to his throat. Orlof was a man of tremendous size and physical strength, but Peter was equally powerful, and alone he probably would have been a match for him. He struggled terrifically. Prince Bariatinsky and Teploff made a running noose with a napkin and passed it round his neck, but Peter managed to shake it off. In doing so he inflicted scars on Prince Bariatinsky's face that disfigured that villain for life. To end the business, Orlof grasped Peter's throat with his hands and slowly choked him to death, while the other conspirators pinned down the victim's arms. The corpse was afterwards exposed, so that the people should have no doubt that the Czar was dead. On the neck they could see clearly the black and blue marks left by Orlof's enormous hands and fingers.

The deed done, Orlof rode back to St. Petersburg and announced to the Empress that the Czar was dead. She dined with her usual cheerfulness.

In a proclamation to the people she gave this explanation: "I sent the deposed Emperor under command of Alexis Orlof, accompanied by four officers and a detachment of gentle and reasonable men, to a place named Ropteha, fifteen miles from Peterhof, a secluded spot but very pleasant. Here he died in four days of a hemorrhoidal colic which was complicated by flying to the brain."

Still another man lived who was capable of troubling Catherine's security on the throne. This was the deposed Czar Ivan VI. During the first two years of her reign there were many plots and conspiracies against her. The officers and soldiers of the guards who had helped her to seize the crown were involved in them. The existence of Ivan was a useful basis for all these plots. Undoubtedly he inherited the blood of the ancient Czars of Russia, while Catherine had not a drop of it. Extraordinary reports were spread about him. It was said that he was a saint, a genius, a prophet.

He was at this time twenty-four years old, and partially idiotic from his brutal treatment, as we have seen. During Peter's reign he had been set at liberty for a brief three months. This seems to add the finishing touch of cruelty to his fate. Upon her accession Catherine immediately ordered him to be shut up in his dungeon at Schlusselbourg once more.

The Mysterious Murder of Ivan VI.

Do you not feel that Ivan's days of life are numbered? An extraordinary intricate conspiracy was devised to get rid of him. Among his guards there was a lieutenant named Mirovitch, whose grandfather had lost his vast estates for taking part in Mazeppa's rebellion against Peter the Great. He started a plot with the object of restoring Ivan to the throne and of regaining his own estates. But there is evidence to show that Catherine or her agents really led Mirovitch into the plot because of the excuse it would give them for killing Ivan.

Mirovitch succeeded in winning over to his plot his company of the Smolensk Regiment, who guarded the fortress of Schlusselbourg. But there was an inner guard over the imperial prisoner. Commanded by two officers, Captain Vlassief and Lieutenant Tschekin, who slept with him in his cell. They had a discretionary order from the Empress Catherine authorizing them to put Ivan to death on any insurrection or other attempt that might be made in his favor.

The door of Ivan's prison opened under a sort of low arcade, which together with it formed the thickness of the castle wall within the ramparts. In this arcade or corridor eight soldiers usually kept guard. The other soldiers were in the guardhouse, at the gate of the castle and at their other stations.

Mirovitch, having secured control of the outer guard, advanced to the door of Ivan's prison on the night of July 15, 1764, and demanded his release. The handful of soldiers of the inner guard opposed him. He produced a forged order from the Senate, proclaiming Ivan Czar and excluding Catherine from the throne.

"Long live Czar Ivan!" cried Mirovitch's men.

Then the door of the dungeon opened and Vlassieff and Tschekin appeared with the dead body of Ivan. During the dispute between the soldiers, it is believed, they had killed him.

Mirovitch threw up his hands, saying: "I have missed my aim; I have nothing to do but to die."

Thus was finally established on the throne of Russia Catherine the Great, who reigned with every disregard of decency, but who ruled with unvarying vigor and success.

The Assassination of Paul I.

After a reign of thirty-four years, Catherine died in 1796 and was succeeded by her son, Paul I., who was doomed to go down the path of death which she had marked out for two Czars.

A conspiracy against Paul was formed under the leadership of Count Pahlen, Governor of St. Petersburg and Chief of Police. It included several sons of those who had been concerned in the deposition and murder of Paul's father, Peter III., in 1762, and also Plato Zubof, the last favorite of Catherine. They expected to control the country under Paul's son, Alexander, who had quarrelled with his father and was in daily fear of imprisonment or exile to Siberia. The Czar was equally estranged from his wife.

Paul had many hints of what was coming. One day he asked Pahlen if he remembered what took place in 1762.

"Yes, sire, I was sergeant of the guard at that time," answered Pahlen.

"They seem to be going to begin again to-day," said Paul, handing him a note which revealed some of the details of the plot.

March 23, 1801, was selected for the deed. The Semenovski Regiment, the officers of which had been won over to the plot, guarded the Winter Palace. At about midnight the conspirators proceeded to Paul's bedroom. Count Pahlen stood outside the door, ready to see that they finished the deed, or to hand them over to Paul's mercy if they failed. One of them carried a lamp. The Czar was not in bed, but they felt and found it still warm. They looked around and found him crouching in a corner of the room, doubtless hoping to escape in the darkness. Apparently he had expected trouble, for he was partially clothed and wearing a dressing gown.

General Benningsen, with a sword in his right hand, presented an act of abdication in his left, which he ordered Paul to sign.

"You traitors!" shrieked Paul, and began to cry for help.

The lamp fell to the floor and left the room in darkness. The conspirators leaped upon Paul and tore him to the ground, fighting like a demon. Then they passed an officer's sash round his neck. Nikolai Zubof and Prince Tatchvil pulled on it and strangled him to death. This foregoing account of the murder is given by the eminent French historian, Alfred Rambaud, who is a great pro-Russian.

Alexander II.'s Martyrdom.

Now we come to the fourth and latest Czar to be assassinated. This was Alexander II., born in 1818, grandson of the murdered Paul and grandfather of the present Czar. Alexander II., the most humane and [illegible] who ever occupied the Russian throne, succeeded in [illegible] the Crimean War. In 1861 he gave freedom to [illegible] serfs, an act with which his name is immortally associated. Then he made a series of reforms, granting more powers of local government, freedom of the press and right of public meeting. These acts enraged the Grand Dukes, nobility, officials, landowners and the whole brood [illegible] by the autocratic system of oppression and plunder. They beset and threatened him, telling him that he was hurrying the country to revolution and ruin. The Czar knew well enough the threat that lurked behind their representations, even if they did not speak of death. The spectres of his murdered ancestors were always before him. The gang around him had inherited the names and principles of the earlier murderers.

Under this pressure Alexander II. weakened and gradually withdrew or modified the reforms he had granted. Then followed the astounding outbreak of nihilism all over the Empire. Indeed, Alexander's life was not safe anywhere in the world. In 1866 he was shot at in the Bois de Boulogne in Paris. Every day new plots to destroy his life were discovered.

In 1879 Alexander learned that the Nihilists had formally condemned him to death. In April of that year the schoolmaster Solovieu shot at him four times in the garden of the Winter Palace. In November dynamite was exploded under his train near Moscow, but blew up the baggage car instead of his own. In February dynamite was exploded in the cellar of the Winter Palace and blew up the dining-room floor. He only escaped because he was three minutes late for dinner.

At this period he entered once more on the path of liberalism under guidance of Louis Melikoff. The officials and court party were determined to stop him at any cost, even with the help of the Nihilists.

The Czar prepared the project of a national constitution, and at the very moment when it lay on his desk, ready to be made public, he was killed.

It was on March 31, 1881. The Czar was to pay a visit to the Marine Corps. As he was driving along the Catherine Canal a bomb was thrown and wounded one of his officers. The Czar stepped out of his carriage to see how he was. Another bomb fell at his feet, shattering his legs and penetrating his abdomen. "Take me back to the palace," were the only words he uttered.

Investigation showed that on the day of the assassination four men were stationed along the Czar's route, each with a deadly bomb. These bombs were made by Trogoni, a chemist of extraordinary ability. Forty-nine Nihilists and novices had volunteered to throw bombs. The whole of Little Garden street was mined with dynamite in case the Czar should pass that way. The actions of the bomb throwers were directed by Sophie Peroffskaya, a girl of noble birth and daughter of the governor of a province. She signalled to them with a handkerchief from the other side of the Catherine Canal, whence she could watch the course of the Czar's carriage during a considerable part of the route. She and five other Nihilists were executed and sixty, indirectly concerned in the plot, were sent to Siberia. The man who actually threw the fatal bomb was killed by it.

As a result of this crime the next Czar, Alexander III., followed a course of dogged and brutal reaction, giving all the power into the hands of the bureaucrats and permitting them to pursue a policy of unrestrained plunder aggression and adventure. He died of an internal malady induced by constant fear of assassination. His weakling son, Nicholas II., has inherited the whole burden of ancestral crime and madness, the constant terror of death in every shape and the spectres of four murdered Czars.

Black Creek, N. Y., [illegible].

THE most miserable minister [illegible] in the world [illegible] is the Rev. L. D. Cook, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this [illegible] of country [illegible] of three hundred inhabitants [illegible] have [illegible] past six years.

[illegible] the country [illegible] mystery which [illegible] sensation [illegible] for days [illegible] of a young [illegible] by a [illegible] society," [illegible] and actions savor of the [illegible] of the Black Hand.

[illegible] Rev. L. D. Cook [illegible] with [illegible] and a moral [illegible] of the cowardice of his [illegible] fighting single handed a battle for his life [illegible] against an unseen and apparently [illegible] enemy, whose weapons are the poison, rocks [illegible]. The brave clergyman is [illegible] those [illegible] even his friends by rendering them silent and [illegible] fear of violence to themselves.

Every man that has shown active sympathy for Mr. Cook or exhibited the slightest disposition to help him unravel the mystery has come under the ban of this mysterious power and is frightened into inactivity by promises of violence. Thus have the parson's friends been intimidated [illegible] to desert him.

Under Detectives' Noses.

In a hamlet of the size of Black Creek every man is known to his neighbors, and few moves are made that are not generally seen. [illegible] acts have been committed by Mr. Cook's enemies under the very noses of the detectives.

The history of this persistent and multifarious hounding of the innocent Methodist [illegible] the resulting terrorizing of the town of Black Creek began in October, 1903. [illegible] Rev. L. D. Cook, thirty-two [illegible] of age, was then assigned by the [illegible] Conference to the pastorate of the M. E. Church at Black Creek. The charge was a comparatively small one, but Mr. Cook was only lately ordained, and [illegible] promotion from his [illegible] Rawson, N. Y. The young man entered into his work with surprising [illegible] results [illegible] his most ardent admirers.

He worked chiefly among the young people, and converted many of them to the Methodist belief. He formed, to the mutual [illegible] of pastor and people, a literary [illegible] and a debating club. With his young wife he made many friends, and it was not [illegible] before he won for himself the respect of the villagers irrespective of creed. Every one was his friend, and he possessed, as far as he knew, no enemy in the world.

Parsonage Burned Down.

On New Year's Day, 1904, two months after the advent of Mr. Cook in Black Creek, the parson left his house to visit a [illegible] girl who was ill. There was no fire in the house at the time, and as Mrs. Cook and her little daughter were out of town for the holidays the parsonage was deserted. Before an hour had elapsed the [illegible] in flames, and from lack of fire-fighting [illegible] was [illegible] to the ground.

In the fire the young minister suffered [illegible] of all his worldly goods, including a valuable library. At the time the pastor was persuaded to believe, from certain very suspicious circumstances connected with the fire, that his house had been maliciously burned; but the incendiary remained [illegible].

The receipt of a letter from the incendiary a year after the burning of the parsonage was a confession which the preacher never expected, but one which confirmed his doubts entertained at the time. However, Mr. Cook soon forgot his [illegible] and with characteristic energy set about to recoup his losses. The generous assistance of his parishioners and fellow townsmen netted him a popular subscription of over one thousand dollars, with which he purchased for the church a new and superior parsonage. His personal losses were also blotted out by generous donations.

Through the Epworth League Herald an excellent library came to the young parson and things looked better than ever before for him and his church in Black Creek. So satisfactory were his labors that the church earnestly demanded his return for another year. This the Conference gladly did, complimenting the zeal and devotion of the young pastor.

Upon beginning his second year he was accorded a welcome and reception such as no pastor ever received before. But the even tenor of his happiness was abruptly interrupted by the second blow of his unknown enemy. This time the act was so open and so significantly hostile that the whole village was startled.

His Horse Poisoned.

On Sunday, December 11, 1904, Mr. Cook, anticipating his usual drive to Abbott's Corners, a small outside mission under his charge, fed his horse about 10 o'clock and repaired to the church for morning service. At 12 o'clock, after the session was concluded, he went to the barn to harness his horse and was stunned to find the animal dead in his stall. Investigating, Mr. Cook found paris green in the feed box in the stall and an empty box which had held the poison nearby. An autopsy revealed the same poison in the stomach of the dead animal. All kinds of theories were advanced regarding the identity of the criminal and the wildest of speculations were set afloat. Nothing that was done disclosed a single incriminating fact against any one.

On Tuesday, December 13, two days after the poisoning of his horse, the preacher found under the screen door at the front of the parsonage a threatening letter. The words were scrawled upon the back of a one-cent advertising envelope such as go unstamped through the mails. The following is the letter as nearly as Mr. Cook can recall it:

> Mr. Cook: If you try to stick your nose in other people's business you will have more than a horse to [illegible] for. You and Hicks are too smart. I killed the horse and will kill you if you don't [illegible] this. Look out.

Letter Stolen from His Bible.

The Mr. Hicks referred to is the postmaster of Black Creek, owner of a large general store, a personal friend of Mr. Cook and an influential man of the town.

Of course Mr. Cook took the letter to his friends on the morning of its receipt and asked their advice about action in the matter. They were as blind as before as to the writer, but several advised the preacher to keep the letter, as it might help convict the person, should he be apprehended.

Following their advice, Mr. Cook, after reading the letter to others around town, hid it in his Bible in his study at the parsonage. This was done while all curtains were drawn, and after all callers had left the house. With Mrs. Cook, he securely fastened the doors and windows of the house. He then retired, and upon looking for the letter in the morning found it missing. The kitchen door he found open and the key upon the floor, the key showing a trace of wax on the end.

This cool exhibition of daring burglary served only to deepen the mystery and to animate the people to more determined efforts in detecting the miscreant. Guards were stationed about the house, and citizens in turn secretly watched at night. Among the most active in this work were Postmaster Hicks, Church Trustee Davis and two others, Torkington and McElheny by name. McElheny had helped raise a purse, through the aid of the Maccabees and others, to purchase for Elder Cook a fine fur overcoat. Notwithstanding the close scrutiny of these and other men, the secret enemy succeeded in delivering another letter in the same place as before and printed again in coarse and straggling letters. It read:

> Cook: Again beware. Tell Hicks and McElheny, Davis and Torkington not to interfere or we will [illegible].

Postmaster Threatened.

Soon after Hicks received a drop letter threatening to set fire to his store if he did not keep out of the affair. This letter was written on ordinary wrapping paper folded into an envelope. Mr. William Torkington was visited at night and when he appeared at the door, a voice from the darkness told him:

"Fire away! Blank cartridges wont hurt anybody."

Upon examination, Torkington found blank cartridges in his weapon. How they came there he does not know, as he is sure that he loaded it with lead bullets.

Continued visits were paid Mr. Torkington with the supposed purpose of drawing the guard from Mr. Cook's house. On one of these occasions Torkington saw a hand picking putty from a pane of glass in the kitchen window. Instead of firing as he should have done, he waited thinking the person would enter the house, in which event he could effect a capture. The person, however, was frightened away. Mr. E. J. Davis, the trustee, was also favored with a call after which the person left his card in the shape of a threatening letter in which the following appeared:

> Set all the watch you please. We are watching too, and will burn the whole town. We know every move you make.

At this stage of the excitement the Sheriff and District Attorney were appealed to to investigate, which they did without throwing any light on the matter. About 7.30 o'clock on the 27th of December, while going to Mr. Hicks's store, a rock whizzed by Mr. Cook's head, just missing inflicting serious injury. The preacher sounded an alarm and gave chase, but in the darkness the man escaped. Mr. Cook had seen the dim form of a medium-sized man wearing a full black beard. A search around the place revealed nothing, this man, by some "magic method converting himself into thin air," according to the animated testimony of one of the natives.

Barely Escaped Vitriol.

On another night it is reported that the unfortunate minister barely dodged a flask full of blue vitriol thrown at him in the hope of destroying his sight or marring his features. Detectives employed by the town and by the private means of certain citizens were present in Black Creek during these last assaults, but were powerless. Not that they were not men of skill but that the common enemy of the village was infinitely more clever than they.

Upon Rev. Cook's return from watch meeting on the night of December 31 he found on his porch a printed threat concealed in an overshoe. From this time on the night watch was doubled and the strictest secrecy maintained as to the location of the guards. It was, therefore, the irony of fate that caused another letter to be left at the side door of the parsonage three nights later on the evening of January 4. This note was found by Mrs. Cook the following morning. This time the contents were printed on coarse wrapping paper and were more specific and menacing than ever. The note read as follows:

> Cook: We will give you thirty days to get out of Black Creek. If you are here then we will have your life. Beware as before of
>

Struck Down by a Stone-Thrower.

It was now that the clergyman was advised and almost forced by his sturdiest friends to leave Black Creek for the sake of his young wife and child and his own welfare. This Mr. Cook bravely refused to do, saying that he would never leave the town with any such reflection upon his character as a minister of the Gospel, and that he certainly would never display the white feather to any foe, seen or unseen. Many considered him imprudent, and their position in the matter was strengthened by another development in the case which occurred on the night of Tuesday, January 17. On that evening Mr. Cook was most cowardly assailed and nearly paid with his life the debt which his archenemies seemed determined to collect.

While the congregation were following the pastor in prayer there came a crash at the north window nearest the pulpit, and a large round stone shivered a piece of wood from the side of the pulpit over which the clergyman stood. With perhaps more recklessness than discretion Mr. Cook rushed down the aisle and out into the night, calling loudly for others to follow. His cries were suddenly cut short by a powerful blow with a rock, which struck him down. Others who followed the nervy parson as soon as they recovered from the shock rushed out, only to stumble upon the still form of Mr. Cook stretched in the snow. The confusion resulting gave the criminal time to make good his escape around the corner of the church sheds and into the darkness.

Meanwhile a doctor had revived Mr. Cook and he was carried to the parsonage in a state of collapse, from which he has not yet recovered.

The house is strongly guarded now, as the people fear that if Mr. Cook remains confined to the house, his persistent enemies will resort to dynamite in their efforts to carry out their threats. What their next move will be is difficult to imagine.

The brave parson is fully determined to stay in the town as long as the blood circulates in his body. But now he is confined to his bed, only a miserable shadow of his former self.

Happiness Hints for Young Wives.

MANY young women seem to labor under the impression that once the marriage ceremony is over their object is attained, they have played their part, so to speak, the future can take care of itself. Never was there a more erroneous impression; as a matter of fact, they are just going to commence playing their part, and a very particular object has to be attained.

It is one thing to gain a man's love, it is quite another to retain it; and the girl who is willing to rest content with having gained it will never make marriage much of a success. A girl generally studies her sweetheart, more or less, she considers if this will please him or if that will not. Well, if that sort of thing is so far essential before marriage, it is absolutely necessary after the nuptial knot is tied; a husband must be studied, and the wife who does not study her husband will never retain his love and respect.

Again, why is it that a sweetheart who always dressed well and neatly before marriage, adopts a slovenly style immediately after settling down? This often happens, and it may give the husband food for much reflection, for what does it hint at? Does it not suggest that having got him, she does not care; in other words, may it not mean that she only dressed carefully in order to entrap him? Let a husband get those ideas into his head, and love, on his side, may be conspicuous by its absence. A wife should really dress just as carefully after marriage as before, more carefully in fact, if she wants her husband to remain a lover also, and by the way, that is the best condition under which married life can be spent.

Then there is another important thing—a wife must always be interested in her husband and all his doings, and her interest must, in certain circumstances, be blended with sympathy. Take his business or profession, for instance. Well, of course it is to her advantage to be interested in his business; if he starts talking about it she strengthened by the fact that his wife takes a deep interest in his affairs; it spurs him on; he has an incentive. Then if business worries crop up she must be sympathetic, and who knows but what she may be able to give him many a valuable hint.

On the other hand, if a wife is apathetic, and takes no interest in her husband's affairs, can one wonder if his love becomes a trifle lukewarm? It is hardly necessary to say a word about cooking and housekeeping, but it may be remarked that a tidy, clean, well-ordered house, coupled with prompt, well-served meals, go a long way in holding a man's love.

THE RICHEST AND HAPPIEST MINISTER ON EARTH

Baltimore, Feb. 10.

THE richest minister in the world is now, doubtless, the happiest minister in the world, for it is announced that on February 20 the Rev. Dr. Richard Lewis Howell will wed Miss Gwendolyn Whistler, grandniece of Whistler, the famous painter, a beauty and the heroine of a genuine love romance.

Palm Beach, Florida, was the idyllic scene of the courtship and betrothal of the millionaire clergyman and this most youthful of reigning American beauties, but the auspicious first meeting and beginning of the romance was in Paris a little more than a year ago.

Dr. Howell, who is a discriminating patron of art, was visiting the Paris Salon with a party of friends. They stopped before Whistler's portrait of his mother just as another little group approached that masterpiece. Dr. Howell, gazing upon the work of his friend, for they had been thrown much together in earlier times, dwelt long and earnestly upon the genius of the artist, and related a number of incidents of his personal recollections of the painter.

It was noticed that the other little group contained quite as interested listeners as the clergyman's own party; but of this Dr. Howell was not at first aware. Upon the peculiarities of the artist he dwelt with loving recollection, refraining from mention of any of the painter's eccentricities usually indulged in by those who have known him. He told of the man as he knew him, overlooking all his faults and remembering only the good that was in him. He told of deeds of charity, and, in a word, made Whistler out to be a gentle humanitarian, a genial, whole-souled gentleman, a wit, a friend to tie to.

She Grasped His Hand in Gratitude.

While Dr. Howell's discourse was being listened to with the deference usually shown to the man who speaks of one of the world's famous men from personal knowledge, it was observed that a young and beautiful girl in the other party, with clasped hands and sparkling eyes, was applauding the clergyman's words with an enthusiasm which the elder lady with her was unable to restrain.

Suddenly, regardless of etiquette, she rushed forward and grasped Dr. Howell's hand in both her own.

"Oh, how can I thank you?" she exclaimed, her eyes brimming with affectionate gratitude. "Of all those who speak of my dear uncle you alone are just."

It was a most unusual and most charming scene, there in the gallery of the Paris Salon, in front of Whistler's portrait of his mother—little Miss Whistler, grandniece of the painter, clinging to the arm of the Rev. Dr. Howell and repeating

"How can I ever thank you enough for your eloquent and just praise of my uncle?"

"Ah," exclaimed the clergyman, "then I have the happiness to meet Miss Gwendolyn Whistler?"

"And you are Dr. Howell," said the girl. And she dragged him to where her father and mother stood, whereupon there were introductions in due form.

There could not have been a more auspicious meeting, and, in the light of subsequent events, it marked a case of love at first sight.

Dr. Howell decided to abandon a contemplated trip to Egypt. Instead he remained in Paris until actually forced to leave for this side of the Atlantic.

Twice within the succeeding year urgent affairs called him to the French capital, and his delightful intimacy with the Whistlers continued. It is told that Dr. Howell first broached the subject of marriage with the daughter about six months ago, and, to the surprise of the parents, the daughter confessed that she had never seen any one with whom she would rather cast her lot than with the handsome American rector.

It was finally agreed to leave the matter without any definite understanding until the Whistlers returned home the first of the year. They arrived in this country early in January and went at once to Palm Beach. There Dr. Howell owns a magnificent villa where, during the last thirty days, he has entertained in magnificent style Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Whistler.

Rich, Handsome and Athletic.

As might have been expected, the announcement of the engagement was early forthcoming, and last Thursday the news reached this city. The bride's trousseau is en route from Paris, which goes to show that she had in no wise changed her mind, for it was ordered months ago.

Dr. Howell is still in the forties, and one of the handsomest of men. He carries his years with as little trouble as most men of thirty-five. He is of athletic build and stands six feet high.

Miss Whistler is petite, eighteen years old, with a girlish face, a magnificent wealth of chestnut brown hair, brown eyes and a figure that is described as perfect in every detail. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Delano Whistler, of Baltimore.

The announcement of the engagement came as a mighty surprise to the smart sets of Baltimore and Washington, where the prospective bridegroom is as well known as is his bewitching fiancee. Baltimore society had been looking forward to Miss Whistler's debut next year with much pleasurable anticipation. She, with her parents, has been abroad so many years, finishing her education, that she had been considered only a school girl. When last here, three years ago, Miss Whistler had not passed beyond the short skirt period. She was voted the most beautiful child that had ever bestowed her bright presence upon the city. For her a social career of exceptional brilliancy was predicted, and that she would make a notable marriage was considered a foregone conclusion.

From Palm Beach comes the information that Miss Whistler appears to be quite as much in love with Dr. Howell as is he with her. Theirs is a constant and inseparable companionship. The good man breakfasts with the Whistlers, and then they drive or go for a whirl in the doctor's motor car. When Dr. Howell takes his afternoon siesta Miss Whistler retires to her own apartment, and there remains until her fiance again appears. They dine together, watch the moon together, and read from the same book or magazine. The evenings are usually passed on the porch of the doctor's handsome villa, and the last face she sees before her maid assists her to retire is that of her husband-to-be.

Curiosity as to how and when this courtship was begun has been rampant in Baltimore and Washington. All sorts of romantic stories were current. One is that he saved her life in an automobile accident on the road to Aix-les-Bains. Another is that it was on a Paris street that he saved her from the annoyances of an impertinent Frenchman. But the incident of their meeting in the Paris Salon, and his subsequent ardent attentions, are now generally accepted as explaining everything.

Traveller and Art Connoisseur.

The personal characteristics of Dr. Howell are probably better understood in Washington society than elsewhere, although he is well known to many leading people of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg and Wheeling, W. Va.

It was in the last named city that Dr. Howell was born, and it was there that his father, Andrew Howell, built up the great fortune which was divided between Dr. Howell and his brother, Frank Howell, of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Dr. Howell was admitted to the Episcopal ministry in 1881, but did not at once enter upon the trying work of the church. He whiled away several years in Europe, taking several courses of lectures, sectarian and otherwise.

He revelled in the art treasures of Italy, France, Germany and Russia. He visited the Holy Land, and rode donkeys under the shadows of the pyramids. He came home a thoroughly seasoned man, who knew the world as well as the church. His only fad while abroad was the purchasing of odd pictures, picked up in the most out-of-the-way places. It is said that when these are hung upon the walls of his New York home they will create a sensation. They have not as yet been unpacked.

His first entrance into the actual work of the church was when he established St. Margaret's, in Washington, at the northwest corner of Connecticut avenue and Bancroft place. The church is now one of the favorite places of worship for many of the fashionables of official life in the capital. It was to Washington that Dr. Howell brought his wife, who was Miss Mary T. Rush, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia. She brought another great fortune to Dr. Howell, and was one of the most attractive and best loved women in Washington society.

Under Dr. Howell's charge the little church grew in influence and numbers. He was a powerful speaker, held to lofty ideals, and his sincerity was apparent in his every utterance. He sought out the poor, and he gave liberally to every worthy object, whether connected with his own or some other denomination. But Dr. Howell soon wearied of the demands made by parish work, and he suffered in health to such an extent that he gave up active ministrations and purchased his fine old country place near Leesburg and attempted to conduct the parish affairs at long range, with the aid of a resident assistant. But this proved a failure. The needs of the parish began to suffer from neglect, and Dr. Howell resigned. Speaking of his work in Washington, a clergyman of that city had this to say the other day:

Planned the "World's Cathedral."

"Howell is one of the handsomest as well as the most magnetic of men. He has a splendid physique and is a most polished gentleman. He is also a man of more than ordinary ability, and I think he would have become famous in the church had not wealth been so abundantly bestowed upon him. He writes well and is a most fascinating speaker. If he had applied himself strictly to theology he certainly would have become a preacher of note.

"If I were asked to define his status in the church I should style him as a conservative prayer-book churchman. He organized St. Margaret's, and during the first year of his rectorship he threw himself into the work of the parish in such an enthusiastic way as to arouse universal praise. His resignation in 1899, after attempting to conduct the parish affairs from his Virginia estate, was due to ill health. But the seeds he had sown brought forth their increase and to-day St. Margaret's is probably the fourth in size and membership of the capital's churches."

The same clergyman who related the foregoing is authority for a glimpse of characteristics that reveal another side of Dr. Howell's mental makeup, and show that he is something of a dreamer.

"Shortly after his resignation as rector of St. Margaret's," he said, "Dr. Howell added not a little to the 'gayety of nations' here assembled by the announcement of a project that nearly took the breath out of the bodies of many of our clergymen, and laymen as well. He proposed to build in this city what he pleased to call a 'World's Cathedral.' It was to be built out of marble with a steel skeleton, was to be the largest building in the world, as well as the most ornate, was to house every denomination of the city in separate chapels and also was to have one main auditorium that would seat not less than 40,000 persons. He proposed that the funds for this magnificent temple be contributed, one cent per year for ten years, by every man, woman and child in the United States, including negroes and Indians. He figured that at the end of ten years he would have $10,000,000 in the building fund.

"So enthused was he with this impracticable idea that he began the publication of a newspaper to exploit the plan. It was issued just twice and then abandoned. We have never heard Dr. Howell mention his 'world's cathedral' since."

Mrs. Howell died in her beautiful home in Connecticut avenue about two years ago. Since then very little has been seen of Dr. Howell in this country.

Dr. Howell's wealth is estimated at more than $3,000,000. A short time ago he purchased in New York three fashionable apartment houses—the Hotel Regent, the Hotel Aberdeen and the Bretton Hall. For these he gave $4,150,000, and paid cash to the extent of $3,000,000 and the balance in Pittsburg realty valued at $1,150,000. His annual income is said to be in excess of a quarter of a million of dollars.

Although Miss Whistler's parents, Thomas Delano Whistler and Mrs. Whistler, call Baltimore their home and maintain several establishments here, the family has been abroad so much during the last ten years that the young daughter is remembered only as one of the most beautiful of children, and from the accompanying portrait, taken two years ago, it would appear that the promise of the days of short skirts has been more than kept.

Those who have seen her recently say she is now a most beautiful young women and that her mind and character are quite in keeping with her physical perfections. Her education has practically been confined to Parisian teaching. She possesses some of the artistic skill that made her granduncle so famous and is a musician of more than ordinary ability upon piano and harp.

It is said that she is very much in love with her handsome, stalwart, clerical fiance—in fact that she really loved him at first sight, although the only sentiment she was then conscious of was that of gratitude to Dr. Howell for his eulogy of Whistler, the painter, whom she idolized living, and whose memory she cherishes.

Dr. and Mrs. Howell will, shortly after the wedding, go abroad, and while they are absent a home in upper New York will be prepared for their return. The honeymoon will probably be passed in Dr. Howell's country estate, Morven Park, near Leesburg. An army of servants are putting the fine old mansion in order, and the whole countryside is looking forward to the coming of the rector and his beautiful bride with expectant joy.

How to Keep a Wife Contented.

By a Happy Husband.

IN these days, when there are so many marriages that do not result in all the happiness hoped for, it may be refreshing to learn how I, a middle-aged, ordinary man, managed to keep my "better half" in a contented and serene frame of mind.

I am quite willing to relate how I did it, and if my readers profit by reading a brief description of the methods I have found it well to adopt so much the better.

To begin with, I never allow myself to give "orders." I started my married life by realizing that I made the woman of my choice my partner when she and I went through the wedding ceremony.

Just as no two equal partners in a sound business concern consider to have all the good judgment and all the wise discretion, so [illegible] the husband should take upon himself the sole duties and responsibility.

Of course certain circumstances may alter cases, but I am writing of the average man and his wife.

I find it an excellent plan to take my wife fully into my confidence on all social matters.

If, for instance, I hear from a man friend, with whom I daily travel to business, that his wife has great difficulty in keeping the household expenditure within reasonable limits, or that she has untold troubles with domestic affairs, I do not, as the vast majority of men do, let the information in at one ear and straight out of the other. Oh, no! I know a better dodge.

On my return home in the evening I tell my wife of my conversation with my friend of the morning, and I do not fail to "rub in" all the pains and worries that his poor wife is passing through.

I relate how grieved and distressed my friend seemed to be, and how much he had taken the subject to heart. Then I adroitly [illegible] by comparing his experience with my own, which—owing to my clever little wife's genius—is so different and so much more conducive to my comfort and happiness.

My scheme of telling my wife of the trials of other men's wives answers admirably.

It is plain evidence to her that she is by no means the unfortunate and unsuccessful person that she might otherwise imagine herself to be, for even the best and most gifted woman will occasionally come to the conclusion that she is not doing so well as some other women are doing.

It encourages her to learn that some of the wives who are looked upon as models are in reality just as much beset by difficulties and drawbacks as she herself.

Any man can make his wife positively joyful by saying that he considers himself well off in being her husband, but very few men have the pluck to say such a thing. Of course, the husband who does say it must have the good sense to act in accordance with his words.

Horrid Bad Form to Be Young, Don't You Know.

SALAD SOCIETY AS IT IS TO-DAY.

OVERHEARD IN THE JUNIOR "400."

"What a relief! He was comin' to try and force us to be young."

SCENE: A [illegible] dance at Mrs. Beckman-Schuyler's house in Fifth avenue. The floor shines like a looking glass and in it are reflected any number of shaded electric lamps, the many-fingered leaves of palms, the white frocks and, in some instances, white ankles of tall, supercilious young girls, and the tight-fitting dress clothes of very young blasé boys. Colonel and Mrs. Beckman-Schuyler are working with indefatigable pluck in their endeavor to spread some enthusiasm among their guests.

THE COLONEL (discovering the seventeen-year-old son of a comrade at Gettysburg leaning moodily against the door): Hello! What's this? My dear young chap, this'll never do!

REGGIE VANDER PEYSTER (trying to suppress a shudder): Ah, what is that, sir?

THE COLONEL (not to be damped): Why, you haven't got a partner for the next dance, my dear boy. Come along now. Brace up.

REGGIE (gently): I don't think it would be much good, sir.

THE COLONEL (longing to punch the boy into life): Now, then. Come and be introduced to a jolly little girl. I shan't let you alone until I see you dancing for all you're worth.

REGGIE: Well, sir, just to oblige you. But—I beg your pardon—will you please take care only to introduce me to a girl who is really pretty? If a girl isn't really pretty there is no excuse for her.

THE COLONEL: But, ye gods, my good boy, I'm going to introduce you to Gladys Suydam-Payne, who is, in my humble opinion, pretty nearly as pretty as her mother was, and she, I may tell you, turned the heads of princes in her day.

"Indeed, sir? Yes, she'll do, please."

REGGIE (unenthusiastically): Indeed, sir? Yes, she'll do, please.

THE COLONEL: Oh, she'll "do," will she? Well, I'm—— I won't say it, but I am, all the same. Gladys, my dear, this is my young friend, Reggie Vander Peyster, who is frightfully keen to know you, and who is aching to dance. Reggie, Gladys, whose mother was——

REGGIE (quietly): You told me that a moment ago, sir.

THE COLONEL: O, did I? So I did. I'm sure I beg your pardon. Er—ha-hmm! (He blushes under the cold gaze of the "boy" and "girl," fidgets with his good-natured feet, and turns away looking horribly uncomfortable.)

REGGIE (after a long pause): Er—I must apologize for the Colonel's youthful exuberance. The frightfully keen part of the business is his, you know.

REGGIE: And as to my aching to dance. . . Well, you know the stamp of man the Colonel is. What? He keeps fishes stuffed in cases in his smoking room, and that kind of thing.

GLADYS: Kind and clean looking, and I've no doubt a good soldier of the old Confederacy pattern, but O, so wilfully eager.

REGGIE: Exactly. And yet, I hear, his son has done his best to educate him up. It's a hopeless task to refront an old building. What? And if one pulls it down and builds another on modern lines, one is bound, so I am told, to come up against a spite fence.

GLADYS (anxiously): You haven't any straggling idea of dancing, have you?

REGGIE: Good Lord, no! That is, not if you——

GLADYS: O, I don't dance now. It went out with the lace frill. Can't we sit down somewhere?

REGGIE: That's bright! Look here, I vote we elbow our way through and get into a corner of the hall, or something. As far away from this appalling band as possible. What?

GLADYS: O, do let's! I can't tell you how those conventional waltz airs disturb my nerves. I can't sleep after them, they seem to jar my soundboard.

REGGIE: I know. Let's hurry before the Colonel commandeers us. Follow me, will you?

(They make their way through the listless dancers out into the hall, where silent couples are sitting here and there.)

GLADYS (arriving at a dark corner, in which there are two large arm chairs): This will do.

REGGIE (standing hesitatingly): It's only honest to tell you that I don't flirt now.

GLADYS (making herself comfortable): Flirting went out with croquet. It never did amuse me.

REGGIE (sitting): Thanks. Ah! this is better. Jolly bad, I find, to stand too long. Must be a great strain upon the spine. Are you all right, Gladys?

GLADYS: I am more comfortable than I was. But, please, don't call me Gladys.

REGGIE: No?

GLADYS: I know it was done at these affairs, but it went out with ping-pong.

REGGIE: O, yes. Look here, I'm sorry, really.

REGGIE: Going back to ping-pong, I was let in to show the game to a party of old connections last night.

GLADYS (with deep sympathy): No!

REGGIE: Yes. I don't ever remember to have undergone so painful a trial. And yet every time I made 40 love they yelled!

GLADYS: I know. It is really profoundly moving, a most eloquent sign of the times.

THE COLONEL (coming nearer): Reggie!

REGGIE (shuddering): That young man again! Don't say a word!

THE COLONEL: Gladys!

GLADYS: For pity's sake hold your breath!

REGGIE: What a relief! He was coming to try and force us to be young.

GLADYS: Well, now I think I will lie back and close my eyes.

REGGIE: (yawning): O, joy!

The Perfect Etiquette of the Maid in the Dining Room.

By Mrs. Linda Hull Larned,
Author of "The Hostess of To-day."

FROM the dining room to the front door, up to my lady's chamber and back again over the route a hundred times a day perhaps, no wonder that the one who does it is apt to be off guard at times. We forget, we to whom the message is brought, that she has no particular interest in the matter except that of doing her work well. No pleasurable anticipation of the expected letter, or the welcome friend, or the much needed parcel, so it becomes a monotonous repetition of uninteresting tasks. But the service in the dining room is different. There she has the inspiration of the family, their individual characteristics or idiosyncrasies to amuse, interest or annoy her. Here she has an opportunity to display her talents, if she has any, and it takes talent, indeed, to serve a family of diverse tastes in a refined and elegant manner and yet to their individual satisfaction.

Before we begin in the dining room, however, we must give some advice concerning the front door, and on the way back we will stop at the telephone. Recent developments, because of the terrible scourge of poverty and sin in our large cities, have made extreme caution necessary. Thieves are growing so cunning that they induce maids by some pretext or other to let them in, and while they are in the hall and the maid is taking the message that Mr. So and So wishes to see a member of the household, or some one has come for the master's clothes to be taken to the repairers, or to fix the telephone, or even to read the gas meter, he takes anything and everything in sight, coats, hats, umbrellas, etc. These he hastily throws outside in the vestibule—anywhere out of sight. So the wise maid should be instructed to keep any one seeking entrance outside in the vestibule unless she knows perfectly well who and what "he" and sometimes "she" is and his or her particular business.

Now the telephone, which should be in a closet, if possible, for the privacy and quiet, are the "summum bonum" of its service. The perfect way is to answer, "Yes, this is Mrs. Blank's residence. Would you like to talk with her or will you give me the message?" or "She is engaged just at present, will you give me the message?" Not, as we often hear, a loud shout "Mrs. Blank, somebody wants to speak to you on the 'phone.'" The one who does this is close kin to that other one who bawls through the hall that "dinner's ready," and they are both a discredit to themselves as well as to those they serve. The usual method employed in houses of refinement is for the maid to go to each one's room and with an unobtrusive rap announce that "dinner is served." In lieu of this, especially in households where there are many to serve and few to do it, the faint sound of a harmonious dinner gong is admissible. When any kind of a function is going on, however, the dinner gong is not good form. The announcement at the drawing-room door where guests are assembled is the only proper way.

Her Perfect Service of the Dining Room.

The etiquette of the dining room service begins with the arrangement of the furniture and the care of the room. It should be thoroughly clean, well ventilated and in good order. In fact, plenty of fresh, pure air is required to digest food. The table should be carefully and regularly set and chairs placed at table before the family assembles. Then with perfectly immobile face, although a pleasant one, the maid's service should begin. The laughter and fun of the family may be shown by a twinkle of the eye and a smile, perhaps, but the servant who stops to take part in what is going on—no matter how amusing or how sad or distressing, or how long she has been one of them—is guilty of a breach of good manners.

Beginning with the breakfast she will put on the doylies first, for it is now good form to use a tablecloth only at dinner, because the hearty American breakfast of ye olden time, or the elaborate European luncheon of to-day is not popular in this country unless the breakfast or the luncheon be a function. The eggs, bacon, or the one hot dish is served from the side table or warm place in the pantry, unless there is but one maid to cook and serve. Even then the doylies are used under the hot dishes that are placed before the man of the house. For this purpose cases of [illegible] linen holding asbestos mats are slipped under the dainty doylies to protect the table from harm.

Every trained waitress knows that it is an arbitrary rule to pass every dish to the left and remove every plate from the right, because we are not ambidextrous, and the right hand naturally reaches toward the left.

The placing of knives, forks and spoons and even of napkins is not arbitrary and many housekeepers are a law unto themselves. At a dinner recently the writer had the misfortune to find all forks and spoons on the right, while the knives were at the left, causing an awkward exchange of utensils when they were called into use. Furthermore, they were arranged according to their size—not as they should be used, beginning with the outside and working in toward the plate. When menus are not in evidence—and they are rarely used at private entertainments—the guest is at a loss to know for what course the three tined fork or the small teaspoon or the miniature shovel are to be saved.

In the serving, especially where guests are present, it is good form to begin with the lady at the right of the host and next time at the right of the hostess, and then to the left and so on. Even the guest of honor does not like to make the first plunge into course after course.

In the home serving when "en famille" the housewife is always served first, then the oldest member of the family and so on. Cups of tea or coffee or anything that is served from the table are put on the tray by the maid, carried on it and by her placed at the right, close to plate and edge of table, at place of the one who is served.

All spoons, knives and forks to be used for the entire meal should be on the table from the beginning.

"Will you please give me the message?"

Crumbs are removed before the last course, if it be a sweet or a dessert, and this is done best by the soft napkin and plate. No broken food or half filled dishes should be left in sight by the careful waitress.

It is now good form to serve everything from the side table for almost every meal, but the Sunday night supper is an exception. In the ordinary family, however, the head of the house usually prefers to carve the roast that should then be set before him. Vegetables, sauces and other things are passed.

The Perfect Service of the Ideal Housemaid.

The supper on Sunday night, being usually the most informal meal of the week, and therefore the most enjoyable, must almost serve itself. This is usually the maid's day off; in consequence the chafing dish performs an important feature. This should always be on a metal tray without the ubiquitous doily, on account of fire, and all the accessories should be in array around it. This is the maid's duty before she leaves her post.

At formal affairs nothing whatever is passed by guests but the salted nuts. These even should be under the eye of the maid who serves, that they repose at last in their accustomed place.

The maid who understands her duties, and would know the good form of dining room service, will see to it that the table linen, silver and glass are never dubious, that the bread and cake which she will cut is uniform, her butter balls alike and her salad crisp and cold, and plenty of clean doilies and tray cloths at hand. She will remember that everything on her table must be as neat and orderly at the close as at the beginning of a meal. In serving the after-dinner coffee at table or in the receiving room she will have the good sense to take as many cups and saucers as she can carry on her tray without piling one on top of another, because it must be hot, and as many should be served simultaneously as possible.

This is the good form of service which any one can learn if she but have the will. That we do not have it always is a pity. We would prefer perfect service, amiably rendered, as our daily portion of the good things of this life. But as we have to depend upon a hybrid more or less incompetent, we may be thankful for a fair endeavor toward securing these decencies of living.

FREE, A FULL 16-OUNCE BOTTLE

In the Spring of 1900 John Chouteau was on his pony near Vinita, I. T., on the Spring round-up. Of a sudden he uttered a heartrending yell and fell from his pony, his feet still in the stirrups. Startled, the pony reared and bucked a minute and then started to run. Quick [illegible] making a [illegible] life was saved.

Chouteau had been subject to terrible attacks of epilepsy since infancy, the attacks coming sometimes three or four times a week, and he has been warned not to ride.

Dr. Grant positively cures cases of epilepsy, fits or falling sickness where all hope has been given up of ever obtaining a cure. To assure that this remedy is all right he will send a large trial bottle to any address free, and if it does all that is claimed for it, the patient can then continue the treatment, which is not expensive.

MRS OSBORN

How To Look Smart in the Rain

By Mrs. Osborn

Creator of Fashions for the Fashionable Women of America.

The most practical is sure to be the smartest dress for a rainy day.

The sort of dress that a business woman can wear in the rain and office, too.

A

A—Rubber coat for rainy days.

B—Short skirt and coat of tan colored rubber and rubber hood to be worn also with rubber coat A.

F—Back view of E.

IT seems to me that the average woman shows a remarkable lack of good sense in her manner of clothing herself upon a rainy day.

You constantly hear a thrifty woman say that she is "providing for a rainy day" whenever she is guilty of a somewhat "close" deal in money matters or declines to be drawn into the extravagance of charity. But when the rainy day comes you wonder what under the dripping skies she has provided when you see her step around in an old skirt of forgotten cut, so ragged as not to be frayed around the edges, with a nondescript coat and a hat that looks as though it had weathered the storm before. Her dress is held up only enough to keep portions of it out of the wet and expose a bedraggled looking pair of shoes, usually without any other protection than ordinary rubbers, although every one knows how soaked the tops of the shoes and the stockings above them get from rubbing against the wet edges of the skirt.

Then there is the girl who goes to business—and her name is legion. She wears a long skirt, which she holds in a bunch high enough to show that she is insufficiently attired below it and is probably wearing low cut shoes, which she will keep on all day in her office and risk all the ills attendant upon sitting around in wet feet.

It may be that she is unable or unwilling to relinquish the furbelow, dear to her soul and her pocketbook alike, and submits to the rain clothing which looks none too well for a wetting.

You might scan the feminine crowd for hours upon a rainy day and see scarcely a dozen women dressed with any degree of appropriateness to the weather.

Vanity, squeamishness and lack of originality are as much to blame for this state of affairs as poverty. There are numbers of women who do not feel able to afford a carriage whenever the weather is bad who could well afford a sensible and smart costume for such days. To such women a [illegible] rainy day costume would be a boon to health and comfort, while to the shop girl and business woman a costume for rainy days becomes a matter of importance and necessity.

A Poor Girl May Be Quite as Smart as Her Rich Sister.

The whole trouble is lack of [illegible]. Women who hunt and walk and indulge in outdoor sports in country places and resorts wear leggings [illegible] and often cut the skirt from four inches [illegible]. It is safer when hunting and mountain climbing not to be hampered with a skirt, and no one thinks it amiss to see these costumes constantly in resorts where outdoor sports are indulged in.

There is no more reason why the poor woman should not wear a sensible costume for the protection of her health and clothing on rainy days than why her rich sister should not wear an even more restricted costume for her amusement.

I have thought a great deal upon [illegible] and have designed a costume which I wish women would copy and wear. It meets all the requirements of the really poor girl who cannot afford to have a suit of clothes to wear out of doors that she may not wear indoors also. At the same time this suit may be worn by the smartest woman if it pleases her to walk and shop in the rain.

We all know that many smart dresses are made of [illegible] for rainy day use with [illegible] and leggings. A complete [illegible] so that no umbrella [illegible]. It is easy for the rich to provide a smart costume for rainy weather, but those who are not rich [illegible] that they must not [illegible].

First I want [illegible] women not to wear petticoats [illegible]. Wear bloomers of silk lined with flannel for warmth if the weather is cold, and I would suggest [illegible] as a good material for them [illegible] of taffeta, a no longer [illegible] among well gowned women.

My Idea of What May Be Really Smart Bloomers.

Figure D realizes my idea of what a sensible and practical rainy day costume should be, and I have [illegible] snow and slush as well as rain.

It has bloomers of the kind described and a kilted skirt, the edge of whose hem just reaches the bottom of the bloomers. High leather leggings are [illegible] snugly buckled, or [illegible] what [illegible]. It [illegible] a pair of light rubbers. In this case a

[illegible] sort of [illegible]

[illegible] in figure D. It is [illegible] are too smart to get any [illegible] from passing vehicles, and the long coat is therefore not an extravagance. When the coat is not going to be removed the skirt may be dispensed with. [illegible] the skirt and are of gray [illegible] black trimmings and this is such another. Tweeds, cheviots and serges make up well in this sort of dress.

The coat is [illegible] with its skirt flaring [illegible] give [illegible]. It has a small velvet collar and pointed [illegible] careful not to [illegible]. A flannel lining [illegible]. A stitched [illegible]. A smart [illegible] a woman so attired can [illegible] attractive [illegible]. The coat [illegible]

Smart Hygiene as Well as Smart Clothes

If every woman would be willing to wear proper clothing they would not only [illegible] health and comfort to themselves [illegible] would build up the race, for upon the health of body and mind of the women [illegible]

For [illegible] now have it, with a somewhat shortened kind skirt that is most fashionable [illegible]

[illegible] Figure A shows one of the most [illegible] and smart [illegible]. It is a [illegible] colored rubber coat [illegible] I bought in England for [illegible] and [illegible] not on sale here and would need to be ordered from a maker of rubber coats. It is comparatively fitted and as [illegible] as a dress. It is made double breasted with two rows of big buttons down the front and has pockets like those of an overcoat and velvet cuffs. Pointed rubber [illegible] in front can be [illegible] over and the [illegible]. Otherwise [illegible] its back [illegible] waterproof [illegible].

Much more [illegible] of light brown [illegible] of dark green and is made with a skirt pointed in the back and [illegible] down the side of the front and with a wide belt and smart [illegible] over the [illegible].

Such a Smart Little Rubber Hood Like a Monk's Cowl.

A [illegible] coat is cut like a man's with [illegible] collar and lapels, and two rows of big buttons down the front [illegible]. It is of great comfort for [illegible] handkerchief and purse can [illegible] in them and the coat [illegible] at the top to give a neat [illegible] sleeve with its turn-up cuff.

Such a costume can be worn without the necessity of carrying an umbrella, since it is provided with a rubber hood like a monk's cowl, which may be worn with it and also with the coat shown in figure A. The cowl has buttonholes which button to the collar of the coat and ribbon strings in front are the color of the leather and are tied under the chin. This hood is thrown over the hat and the border is turned back so that it is really pretty and attractive, instead of ugly as one would imagine. In [illegible] the border can be drawn forward over the face.

Scotch flannel in a [illegible] board pattern in black and white is the material used in the suit shown in figure C. The skirt is made with forward turning pleats and a deep [illegible] and is a little shorter than the skirts cut for walking purposes.

The [illegible] bodice is made with [illegible] which are pleated to the shoulder and have a large black bow where they cross in front. Two overlapping pieces of fine lawn, tucked and edged with lace, form the collar, which comes to a point above the bow at the bust, the V left open by the surplice is filled with a tucked stock to match the collar.

Sleeves of medium fulness are pleated in a large turned up cuff [illegible] buttonholes through which [illegible] tied in a bow.

With the coming of Spring we are impressed with the necessity of having suitable clothing in which to meet weather conditions, and I hope that women will seriously consider this question, one that I believe to be the most important in woman's dress.

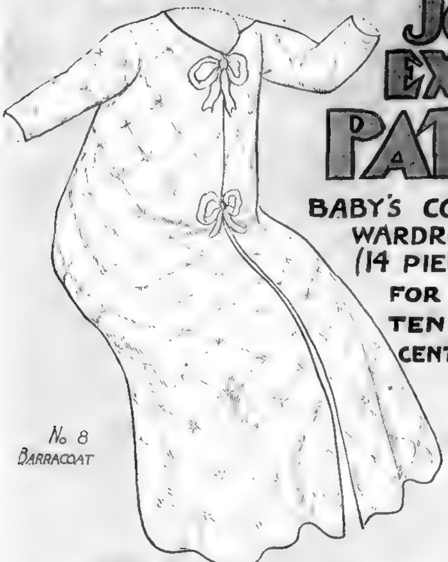
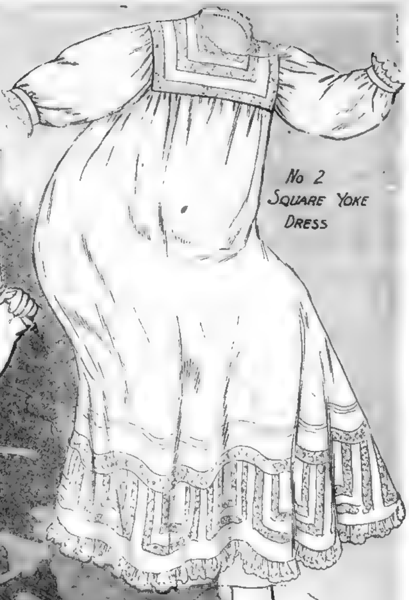
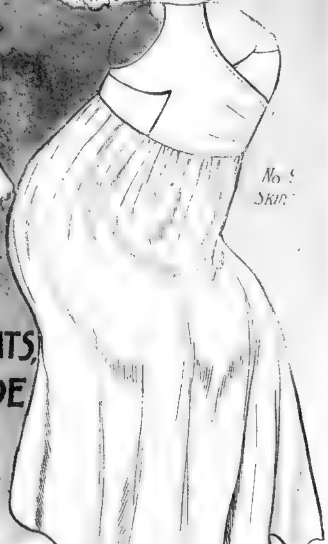
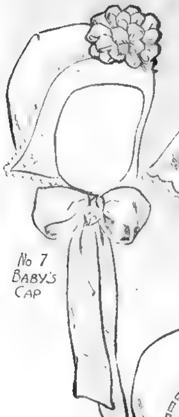
SUNDAY AMERICAN JOURNAL EXAMINER PATTERNS

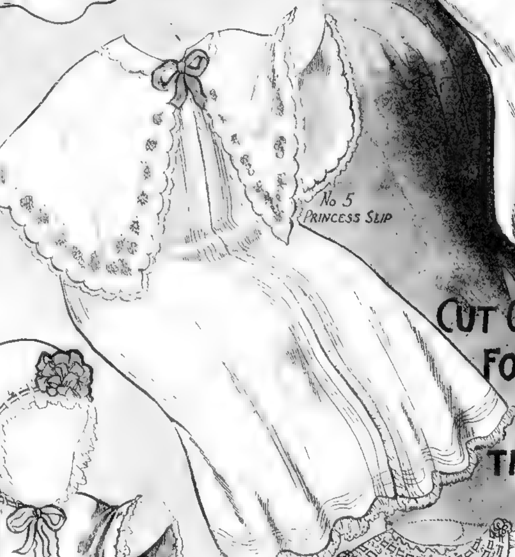
BABY'S COMPLETE WARDROBE. (14 PIECES) FOR TEN CENTS

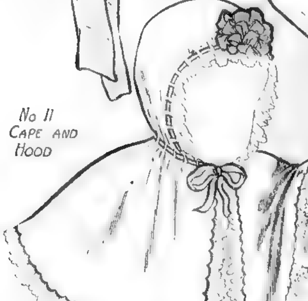


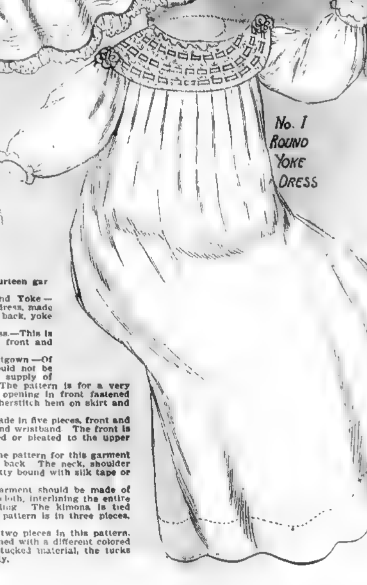


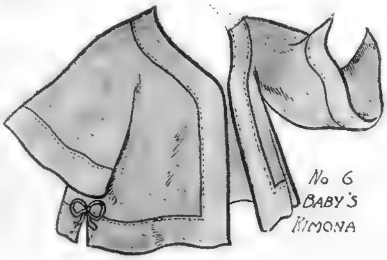












CUT OUT THE GARMENTS, FOLLOWING OUTSIDE LINES, AND TRY THEM ON THE BABY

A COMPLETE set of patterns for fourteen garments for the "layette," or infant's wardrobe is offered to-day for ten cents in the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner pattern series.

Several of the garments are illustrated on this page, surrounding baby in his nightgown. With a pair of scissors carefully cut out all of the garments, following outside lines, but not the dotted lines, and dress the baby with them. The little princess skirt, cape and hood, dresses, cloak and all the other things will be found to fit perfectly. In this way you will be able to see at a glance how attractive the different little garments are and how pretty the baby looks in them.

This is baby's own bargain day in the pattern series. To obtain the complete set of patterns for making the infant's wardrobe set, 14 pieces, all you have to do is to fill in the accompanying blank, giving your name and post office address. Then mail the filled-in blank and ten cents in money or stamps to "Baby's Wardrobe Patterns," P. O. Box 260, New York City. The complete set of patterns, together with full instructions for making the 14 garments, will be mailed to you postpaid by return of mail

No reform has been more sweeping or contributed more to the wearer's comfort than in the making of the wee baby's clothes. It is no longer necessary to use pins that might prick, buttons that press upon the little body or to smother the baby in yards and yards of embroidery The one object now is to make everything for baby as sanitary and comfortable as possible. The up-to-date mother no longer accepts advice and traditions of mother and grandmother, but sets out herself to find which is the most approved style of dress.

All these things have been borne in mind in the designing of the fourteen garments in the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner baby's wardrobe outfit Each piece has been made with a view to baby's comfort and peace of mind, as well as the prettiness of the garment itself.

Here is a list of the fourteen garments in the "layette"

No. 1—Dress with Round Yoke—This is a very dainty little dress, made in five pieces, front, sleeve, back, yoke and wristband

No. 2—Square Yoke Dress.—This is easily made in two pieces, front and back combined and sleeve

No. 3—Wrapper or Nightgown—Of course baby's wardrobe would not be complete without a goodly supply of wrappers or nightgowns. The pattern is for a very dainty little garment with opening in front fastened with ribbon ties and a featherstitch hem on skirt and sleeve.

No. 4—Cloak—This is made in five pieces, front and back of yoke, cape, sleeve and wristband. The front is featherstitched and gathered or pleated to the upper edge of yoke.

No. 5—Princess Slip—The pattern for this garment is in two pieces, front and back The neck, shoulder and armholes look very pretty bound with silk tape or embroidered

No. 6—Kimona—This garment should be made of albatross, lined with cheesecloth, interlining the entire garment with cotton wadding The kimona is tied with bows of ribbon. The pattern is in three pieces, front, back and sleeve.

No. 7—Cap.—There are two pieces in this pattern. The front of cap is to be lined with a different colored material or trimmed with tucked material, the tucks running across or diagonally.

No. 8—Barracoat.—One piece, garment tying at back with tapes sewn on the ends.

No. 9—Skirt.—The pattern for this garment shows just how to cut the cloth and how it is to be gathered and joined to body portion to form a pretty little skirt

No. 10—Diaper.—This is to be made of linen or cotton bird's-eye goods, according to directions.

No. 11—Cape and Hood.—This is a one-piece pattern, the garment being lined with silk and an embroidered scalloped edge running all the way around

No. 12—Bath Apron.—For baby's toilet a bath apron is very necessary. The pattern for the apron shows how it can be made in the most suitable and convenient manner.

No. 13—Sack or Kimona.—This pattern is in one piece. The sack is trimmed with bands. Tie sleeves and under-arm portions together with tiny bows of ribbon, closing the front with ribbon ties.

No. 14—Knit Band.—This band is to be made according to directions supplied, using Saxony yarn, and knit on four needles.

THE DWARF ON THE GIANT'S SHOULDERS

HOW does the world progress? Are the men of each generation greater than those of the generation before? Is the INDIVIDUAL INTELLECT now a more powerful engine than it was in the old days? Have we improved the human brain as we have improved machinery?

Is there any advance in man's mental power to be compared with the advance that the steam engine has made over the ox cart, that the great loom has made over the spinning wheel?

No. Improvement in the brain of man has been very slow and an almost imperceptible process. The development of that brain began many millions of years ago in inferior forms of life.

What we call "the human brain" has developed very slowly through hundreds and thousands of centuries.

The development has been at times rapid in some one little spot of human life, slow or almost nonexistent among the great masses of human population.

For instance, there was great mental development in Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, followed by more extraordinary intellectual growth in Greece, which spread to Italy, giving birth to the Roman genius.

While the mind of man was reaching a phenomenal development in certain favored spots around the shores of the Mediterranean, the great mass of human beings in Africa, Northern Europe and Asia remained stationary, with no signs of mental growth.

* * *

We are not equal to-day to the Greeks in mental power. It is not likely that we have any living brain comparable with that of Aristotle. It is certain that there is nowhere in our world a citizenship as high in intellectual average as that of the citizenship of Athens in the days of Pericles, and later.

In those days the meanest mind (among THE CITIZENS—the great mass of slaves were intellectually dead) had a clear idea of politics, was intelligently interested in science, art, literature and the drama. It has been said without exaggeration that the average intelligence of the citizenship in the streets of Athens was far higher than the intellectual average in the most carefully selected parliament of our day.

As to the giant intellects of Greece—with Aristotle at the head of them all—we have probably no individual brains among us that compare with them. Our civilization, a raw and new-born product, blossoming on the ruins of the Dark Ages, and devoting its energies to mechanics, trade and industry rather than to purely intellectual pursuits, is a feeble thing compared with the splendid civilization of Greece.

* * *

Yet the men of to-day are, as a matter of fact, far ahead of the people of Greece BECAUSE THE DWARF ON A GIANT'S SHOULDER CAN SEE FARTHER THAN THE GIANT. As individuals, we are dwarfs, perhaps, compared with men like Aristotle. But we stand on their shoulders. We stand upon the shoulders of all the great men that have lived ahead of us, whose works and acquired knowledge we have inherited.

We are below them in our capacity for original thought.

We are far above them in what we actually KNOW in our real grasp, and in our boundless possibilities.

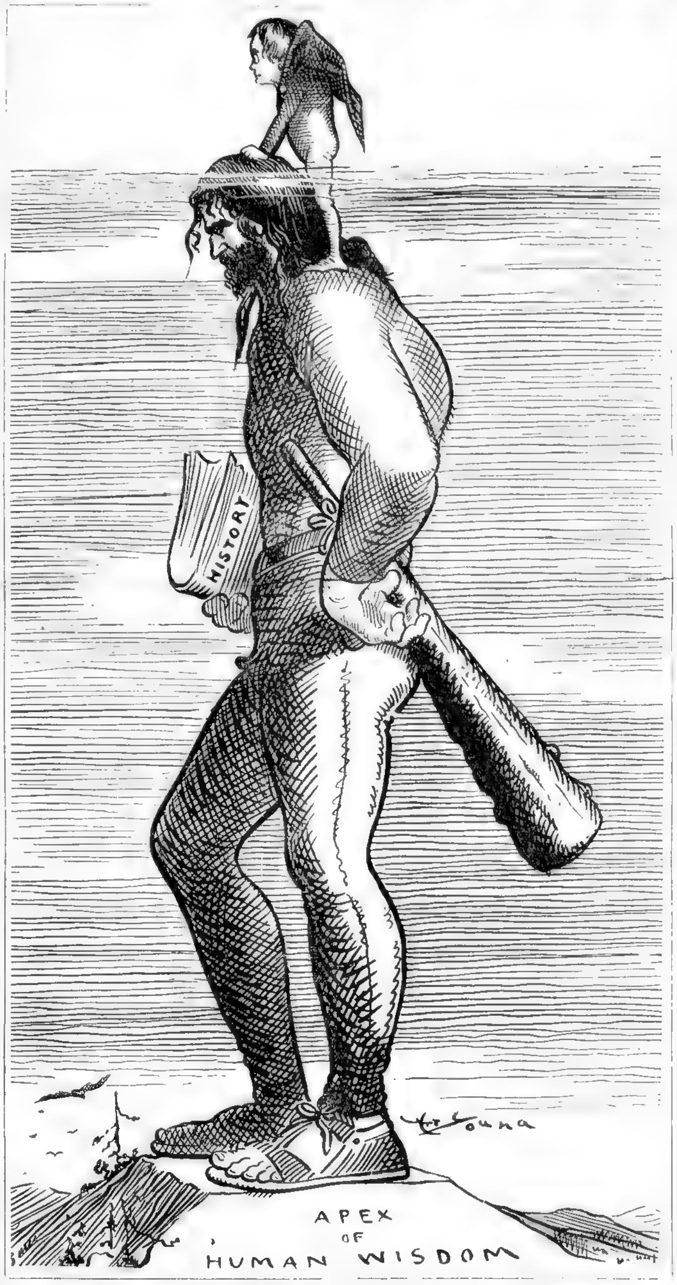
It is a splendid thought that we are, in actual REALITY, "heirs of all the ages."

It is magnificently encouraging to realize that in our public schools of to-day we have hundreds of thousands of children that actually KNOW MORE than the greatest of the great minds of antiquity.

Aristotle—considering his lack of inherited information—accomplished marvels as a student of nature and her secrets. Helped by his wonderful pupil, Alexander the Great, he secured information from all parts of the world, which that pupil conquered and explored. We read dumfounded of the individual intellectual achievements of which he was capable.

Yet this giant is a BLIND giant, compared with the little man of to-day who stands on his shoulders, and on Bacon's shoulders, and on Darwin's shoulders, and looks out into the world of knowledge infinitely farther than any one of them could look.

Aristotle, for instance, with all his power of intellect, could not conceive that the brain was in any way connected with the operations of the soul of the intellect. He thought of the brain as a cold, clammy, unimportant white mass, with a little brown covering over it. He actually believed that its chief function was the secretion of fluids to moisten the eyeballs, etc. He thought that the heart—which every child now knows to be a mere pump—was the seat of the emotions and of thought.



Here Is the Most Encouraging Word in Regard to Human Progress: "A Dwarf on a Giant's Shoulders Can See Farther Than the Giant.

There is probably not a man living possessing any intellect that could be compared with Aristotle's. Yet there are millions of children under ten years of age that—STANDING ON THE SHOULDERS OF THE MEN OF THE PAST—know more in matters of vital importance than Aristotle knew.

* * *

It is the same in every field of intellectual exploration. When we read the story of Newton's work it seems impossible to believe that an individual intellect could compass such great achievements.

He gave us the law of gravitation, the law that controls OUR corner of the Universe, at least.

And, descending from this splendid generalization, he developed for the use of men the differential calculus, simplifying more than the ordinary mind can comprehend the intricate mathematical processes necessary to cosmic exploration.

Yet, every educated lad to-day knows all that Newton knew about the law of gravitation. AND, STANDING ON THE SHOULDERS OF THAT GIANT, men far smaller than he are pushing the boundaries of knowledge beyond his furthermost point.

Possessing his great law as a starting point, men are reaching out for that law of "counter-gravitation" which must exist since gravitation without counter-gravitation would mean matter is ultimate concentration and chaos.

With Darwin, as with the other great intellects, it is the same. Through painstaking study that lasted over an entire lifetime, and that patiently deferred for years the glorious results of scientific exploration Darwin gave to the world his facts and his theories concerning the development of species in the animal kingdom, resulting in the final production of man on the earth. Men inferior to him in genius have accepted with gratitude the actual discoveries and the fascinating theories that he gave to us. Humbly recognizing their inferiority, but STANDING ON HIS SHOULDERS and knowing what he knew, they are going beyond him and striving to answer the questions that he did not answer.

Prince Kropotkin, in his splendid study, shows that mutual aid, instinctive tendency toward generosity and co-operation, has produced results, equal or superior, to the results that come from Darwin's famous "Struggle for Existence."

Where Darwin, the giant, blazed the way, a thousand intellectual dwarfs, feebler than he individually, but infinitely stronger because POSSESSED OF HIS WEAPONS, are supplementing his work.

* * *

It is not only in Science, Art and Politics, but in the every-day life of every man, that the picture on this page has its meaning. We are all little dwarfs, borne on the shoulders of a giant that is named ACCUMULATED HUMAN WISDOM.

Each one of us, if we will but take the trouble to acquire the teachings of history, may know more than any individual, more than any thousand individuals, that have lived before him—although everyone of the thousand, as an individual, was infinitely our superior.

Every little individual of to-day CAN see further out into the realms of knowledge than any man that lived in the past, however great he may have been.

Yes, it is true that the dwarf on the giant's shoulders can see further than the giant.

But first of all HE MUST CLIMB UP THE GIANT'S BACK AND STAND ON HIS SHOULDERS.

What is the first duty of every man who wants to take the opportunities offered to him? That duty is to POSSESS HIMSELF of the accumulated knowledge that the past has handed down.

The undertaking seems big, but it is not big.

Even to-day, with education practically unorganized, with no sensible, simple map to guide a man through the land of knowledge, it is no great task to get a FAIR idea of what men have done and known in the past.

To read a few good histories and know what humanity has gone through is the first step.

This should be supplemented, of course, by a sufficient knowledge of astronomy—the reading of one good book suffices. It tells the dwarf, the imperceptible insect on the surface of this imperceptible planet, where he stands in that vast creation that surrounds him. It gives him his mental bearings in infinite space.

Following the study of the Universe, as a whole, and of humanity in this tiny corner of the Universe, comes the study of the world's literature, a simple and a pleasing process—the reading of half a dozen books would be sufficient.

Next comes an acquaintance with science—its GENERALIZATIONS, not its details.

* * *

With these things possessed—a knowledge of what men have done and thought and conceived and endured before you got here—you may climb upon the back of the giant and be ready to look out beyond his range of vision. Then add, if you can, some little thing to the mass of accumulated knowledge—add your little fraction of an inch to the giant's height, giving a better outlook to those that shall come after, and you can melt back honorably content in the great mystery that produced you.

ADVANTAGES TO BOSTON GAS CONSUMERS THAT WOULD BE BROUGHT ABOUT BY

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

By Prof. FRANK PARSONS, President of the National Public Ownership League

Written Expressly for the Boston Sunday American

THE fundamental test of any institution, method or service must be its effect upon the public good, its relation to morals, manhood, government, industry, civilization and progress, and in applying this vital test the principal emphasis must be placed, not upon financial results, but upon human results; not on money, but on manhood. Final values—real values—must be measured in terms of life and progress, not in terms of dollars and cents. Dollars and cents are important, of course, but life, liberty, justice, virtue and intelligence are infinitely more important.

Material wealth is an excellent thing rightly obtained and properly used, but it is not an end in itself; it is only one of the raw materials of civilization. Justice, character and human development, happy homes and noble lives are the real ends for which lighting plants, street railways and all other institutions, industrial, political or social, exist, and only so far as they conduce to those ends is their existence justified.

LABOR'S INTEREST IN PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

A private corporation buys labor at competitive prices. A public system mingles consideration of justice and public policy with the principles of commercialism, and lifts the wages of labor above the competitive level. For example, the Detroit municipal lighting plant pays union wages and works on the eight-hour day, while the private companies work their men ten hours. Other illustrations have already been given in speaking of Glasgow and Liverpool. The workers are part owners in the public plant, and as part owners are [illegible] than is ordinarily accorded by private employers.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS, PULPIT AND PLATFORM

Editors and preachers criticise public institutions much more freely than private corporations. The owners of the big companies frequently hold large interests in the newspapers, and are influential members in our churches, and the [illegible] print newspapers or pay preachers to attack the business transactions or oppose the measures they are trying to lobby through legislature or council.

The editors of some of our Boston papers are unable to attack the gas companies and other monopolies, or express their views on municipal ownership. They are muzzled by the owners of the papers, whose business interests override liberty and the truth.

In the Cleveland gas case it was in evidence that editors of leading papers and other influential people were supplied with free gas, and it was admitted that $24,000, which was charged to "insurance and depreciation" (in 1890 and 1891, when the entrance of a competing gas company was being defeated in council), did not go to those purposes at all, but to expenses, the nature of which the secretary-treasurer could not remember, and for which he had no vouchers or written memoranda, although the expenditure of every cent for other purposes was plainly accounted for in his books.

POLITICAL CORRUPTION

It is frequently urged against municipal ownership that it would lead to political corruption and mismanagement through abuse of the patronage, and the fact is that the chief cause of political corruption in our cities to-day lies in the presence of the great private monopolies, and it is hardly conceivable that political corruption could be increased by the removal of the chief cause of the corruption. It is not the public gas or electric works, schools or highways that maintain lobbies in the halls of legislation or corrupt our officials. It is the private companies that do this.

A high authority in Boston gas negotiations said, in 1897: "The Massachusetts Pipe Line mongrel charter, procured from the Legislature of 1896, cost about $500,000." And in a later case he testified that other interests had expended $1,000,000 to "influence legislation in respect to a single deal in the Boston gas field."

It is clear that in all three of the great invasions of the Boston gas field by Addicks, Standard Oil and Whitney interests money was freely used at the State House. And it is also clear that aggressive corporate interests have secured the legislation they desired; that the trust has been allowed to work its will in the dark, practically unhindered by the Legislature, and that the people's interests have not been protected as they should have been. It is not necessary, however, that any considerable number of legislators should have been purchased for cash. The people send to the Legislature generally a lot of lawyers—men whose whole training is in the direction of selling their advocacy. They are not trained to devote themselves to the support of what they deem right and just, but to push for what they are paid for. Their profession is to sell their ability, influence and advocacy to the highest bidder. It is easy for big corporations to retain lawyer members of the Legislature for important and perfectly legitimate services, and so, without any conscious corruption, fill their minds with favor to the corporate interests and win their friendship and support in the Legislature. If an undue proportion of men whose whole psychology leads them to sell their advocacy are sent by the people to the State House, just the place where the corporations most need to buy advocacy, there need be no surprise that corporate interests have the right of way in the Legislature.

RICH MEN INTERESTED IN BAD GOVERNMENT.

Abolish private monopoly and the rich will have nothing to gain and everything to lose by bad government—no franchises to get from "boodle aldermen," but poor gas, blinking electric lights, etc., and accentuated taxes by abuse of patronage.

They will therefore join with the common people in the demand for honest and efficient civil service and for the nomination and election of competent and reliable men. As part owners in private gas plants, etc., their financial interests are opposed to good government, but as part owners in public gas works, etc., their financial interests would demand good government.

Few matters in connection with this subject are more important than this change of interest and civic relation of men of wealth and power. To annihilate abuse of patronage we must adopt a thorough system of civil service, based on merit and efficiency, and in a reasonably civilized community nothing can more surely bring this to pass than a great increase in the weight and importance of public business.

Not only will the public ownership of monopolies compel the rich to stand with the poor for good government, but the people in general will be stimulated to new effort for better administration. They will say: "With these great properties in our hands, the public business has become far too important to trust to rascals. We'll elect the best men we've got to manage these great interests."

It has worked that way across the sea, the increase of municipal ownership being recognized as one of the chief influences in purifying the government in Birmingham and other English cities, and the logic of the situation clearly indicates that public ownership must operate in the direction of political purity.

INDUSTRIAL DUKES AND PRINCES

Private monopoly means industrial aristocracy. Our constitution provides against aristocratic titles. There would be a revolution if Congress should confer the title of lord, duke or earl on Vanderbilt, Gould, Rockefeller, Lawson, Morgan, Whitney or Addicks.

Lord Rockefeller, Duke Morgan, Earl Addicks and the rest would soon find the country too hot for their habitation, yet the essence of royalty and aristocracy is not in the title, but in the overgrown power which one man possesses over his fellows. Legislative grants of gas franchises and other great monopolies, enabling their owners to collect millions from the people, create a real aristocracy, with far more power over their fellow-men than many of the titled aristocrats of the old world.

TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION

John Stuart Mill long ago pointed out the fact that monopoly charges are a species of taxation. The power of taxation is a sovereign power, and only the sovereign people have a right to exercise that power; wherefore, monopoly which involves that power can rightly belong only to the people. Moreover, courts and jurists are agreed that the power of taxation can rightly be used only for a public purpose, but when a monopoly is in private hands its power of taxation is used for private profit.

So that private monopoly means not merely taxation without representation, but taxation without representation for private purposes—a grievance greater than that for which our fathers fought against England in the American revolution.

THE ASTONISHINGLY RAPID GROWTH OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

A hundred years ago there were sixteen waterworks in the United States and only one of them was public; now more than half of the waterworks of the country are owned and operated by municipalities. In Massachusetts, seventy-five per cent of the waterworks are public; in Illinois, seventy-eight per cent.; Michigan, eighty-one per cent.; Iowa, eighty-two per cent.; New York, fifty per cent.; Minnesota, eighty-seven per cent.; Nebraska, eighty-eight per cent., etc. Some thirteen municipalities in this country and over 500 in Great Britain and Germany own their gas plants.

In Germany over half the gas works are public, and in the United Kingdom, outside of London, more than half the gas is supplied by public works. About 300 electric lighting plants in the United States are public property. In Great Britain, in the last ten years, about fifty cities have entered upon the operation of their street railways, and more than half the mileage in the United Kingdom belongs to the cities.

Outside of the United States about ninety-five per cent of the telegraphs of the world are public, and more than 2,000,000 people have petitioned for public wires in this country. The railroads, too, are public property in nearly all civilized countries.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AND THE OPINIONS OF EMINENT MEN

The sentiment in favor of public ownership is growing with tremendous rapidity. At a hearing in favor of municipal street railways a few years ago I heard Thomas Wentworth Higginson tell the legislative committee that fifty years before he had come to the State House to argue for the municipalization of the waterworks, and had been met by precisely the same objections that were now made to public ownership of the trolleys.

Governor Douglas has strongly urged upon the Legislature the claims of municipal ownership, and asked for legislation that will open the door to municipal management of public utilities. Jefferson, Jackson, Clay, Sumner, Grant, Edmunds, Wanamaker, Bryan, Lowell, Walker, Phillips Brooks, Professor Ely, Rev. Lyman Abbott, Henry D. Lloyd, William Dean Howells, Felix Adler, Dr. C. L. Taylor, Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Rev. Washington Gladden, Dr. Albert Shaw, Professor Bemis, Major Jones, Governors Pingree, Rogers, Folk, La Follette, Van Sant, Senator Pettigrew and many other eminent persons can be quoted as favoring the municipal ownership of public utilities.

THE TREND OF HISTORY

Public ownership is higher in the scale of civilization than ownership by a private corporation. The history of civilization is the history of the development of co-operation in ever widening circles, till at last the all-inclusive circle of public ownership is reached. At first defence was a private affair. Each man took care of himself. But as common sense has developed men have united for security in larger and larger groups, tribes, states and nations—making defence a public business.

It was the same with the administration of justice and all the other functions of government; at first private, but becoming public as civilization grew. Education, fire service, water supply, roads, parks, communication of intelligence, all sorts of public utilities or business in which the people have a strong interest have passed through the same stages of evolution, private at first and public later as civilization has risen to higher levels and the union of all for the common interest in sphere after sphere of activity has become possible.

The private corporation is itself a step in the process of crystallization, which will not be complete in respect to any public utility till the little corporation melts into the big one, the partial union into the complete union of all concerned. Public ownership is simply a further step in the progress toward the complete organization of industry, of which the corporations are partial and undeveloped forms—an organization which I hope may become complete through the development and co-ordination of two great movements:

1. The public ownership of monopolies and some other public utilities, such as education, fire service, etc., the true diffusion and development of which are too important to be left to private enterprise.

2. The growth of voluntary co-operation in manufactures, commerce and agriculture, with federation of the co-operative groups and the co-ordination of the whole with the united public utilities.

There was a time when education and fire protection, roads, bridges and canals, hospitals, parks, cemeteries, etc., were wholly private affairs. Now they are very largely public. Private turnpikes and bridges are getting scarce, and the public schools are overwhelmingly predominant, even in the college grades. The rapid movement toward public absorption of waterworks, gas and electric plants, street railways, telegraphs, telephones and railroads has been noted.

Is this movement a mistake? Shall we abandon the public waterworks and the postoffice, the public streets, bridges, parks, libraries, museums, schools, courts, armies, navies, etc. Shall we give the army to a Yerkes syndicate? And the navy to a Gould corporation? Shall we give up the courts to a Rockefeller trust? Or the roads and schools to a Morgan combine?

If not, if we would not think of going back to private ownership in the businesses that have been given to public management, then let us be consistent and aid the movement to give other similar industries the benefits of public operation and complete co-operation. Would you think well of one who opposed the establishment of public courts, or schools, or highways, or waterworks years ago? If not, be careful not to oppose the corresponding movements of your own time.

Perhaps we can help ourselves most clearly to see the matter in its true light by remembering that even the government itself was not so very long ago a private monopoly, owned by the king or emperor or a few aristocrats, and that the chief complaint about it now, where complaint exists, is that it is still too much subject to private control; that is, its socialization is not yet perfect, and progress requires the completion of the process.

THE TEST OF CIVILIZATION

There is no better test of the degree of civilization to which any society has attained than the extent to which its members have learned to co-operate with each other for their common purposes, political, industrial and social. Judged by this test, Boston is less than half civilized industrially—less than half way from the chaos and conflict of industrial barbarism to the co-ordination and harmony of industrial civilization. Many cities of Europe and America are far in advance of Boston in the development of public ownership and other forms of co-operative industry. We call our beloved city the Hub, a name which is appropriate in many ways in Boston, the psychologic pivot of the universe, and is appropriate in other ways in reference to the fact that the hub moves more slowly than other parts of the wheel.

NOT A DOLLAR OF DEBT IS NECESSARY.

Objection is often made to municipal ownership on the ground that it will saddle the public with debt. The objectors do not explain why a municipality should hesitate to take a gas or electric or street railway debt along with the plant, while private companies are eager to have these monopolies, notwithstanding the debts involved.

If the franchise and plant is a good thing for a company, in spite of the debt, then it is a good thing for the city, in spite of the debt. The truth is that upon the transfer of the ownership of gas works, etc., to the city, the profits that now go into the pockets of a few stockholders may be used, in whole or in part, to pay off the debt, so that in the course of a few years the people will own the plant free of debt, and rates can be reduced to the cost of operation plus depreciation. This will soon be the case with the municipal lighting plant of Detroit.

It is not necessary, however, for the city to incur any debt at all in order to secure municipal ownership of gas or other works. It is easy to get private capital to build works or buy existing plants under a contract to turn the property over to the city free of debt at the end of a twenty or thirty-year franchise. This is the plan on which Springfield, Ill., obtained its municipal lighting plant.

Leipsic has an admirable lighting contract, one part of which provides that at the end of the franchise term the works shall become the property of the city without cost. In Hamburg the street railway tracks revert to the city at the end of the charter period.

In 1894 an outside company offered to build a plant of 1,000 electric lights in Minneapolis and sell it to the city for $1 at the end of a five-year franchise, if meanwhile it might receive $150 per arc per year, which was the price the old company was getting.

In Budapest, the capital of Hungary, a city of about 500,000 inhabitants, the street railways were built by private capital, and at the expiration of existing charters the roads and their equipment are to be the property of the city without payment to the private owners. The fares are fixed by law and average two and one-half cents per passenger.

Heavy taxes are paid to the city, a good reserve fund and a fund for the care of employes are provided, and after all the electric roads pay eight per cent. dividends on the investment. The underground conduit is used in the centre of the city, and the overhead system in the outer districts. All books and accounts of the companies are open to public inspection.

In other cases it is provided by law that the city may buy the plant after a reasonable term at the actual value of the physical plant. Under the British Tramways Act of 1870 street railways built and equipped by a private company may be taken by the town or city after twenty-one years, at the actual physical value.

The French Government granted telephone franchises to private companies on condition that they should pay ten per cent. of their gross receipts to the State, and that the State should have the right to fix rates, and to buy the system at the end of the five-year franchise for the value of the materials employed in it. When the Government took the lines the ten per cent. receipts had more than covered the purchase price under the agreement.

SQUEEZE OUT THE WATER.

Where overcapitalization impedes municipalization, the city may get fair terms of purchase by building a competing plant of its own or squeezing out the wind and water from the corporation capital by securing the reduction of rates through the exercise of the public right to regulate monopoly charges, or by taxing the companies on the face values or the market values of their stocks and bonds, whichever values are highest, or by requiring the companies to write off liberal depreciation and call in excessive stock, or by taking for public use a good percentage of gross receipts or profits.

MAKE THE MONOPOLISTS PAY.

One way to deal with the financial part of the problem would be to establish progressive income and inheritance taxes, to put into the public treasury a large part of the wealth absorbed from the people by the great monopolists.

The larger part of the money and property accumulated by the wealthy, even where they are not chargeable with fraud or oppression, is the product of social forces, and of right belongs to the public. The funds secured by progressive taxation of incomes and the progressive subtractions or limitations of inheritances could be used to pay for gas and electric plants, railways, telegraphs, etc.

In other words, we may require the monopolists to pay off the debts on the monopolies in favor of the public, out of the excess of wealth they have drawn from the public beyond a fair equivalent for the services they have rendered to the public.

REGULATION FAILS AT THE VITAL POINTS.

Regulation will not afford a full solution of the problem because:

1. It cannot remove the antagonism of interest between the owners and the public, which is the main root of monopoly evils.

2. It cannot eliminate the congestion of benefit, though it may modify this congestion.

3. It cannot prevent the existence of a privileged class.

You have still antagonism, congestion and aristocracy, instead of harmony, diffusion and democracy. Regulation can do something, but it cannot attain to harmony of interest or full diffusion of benefit or equal rights and true democracy.

Moreover, the regulators are very apt to be regulated by the regulatees. The law establishing the Massachusetts Gas Commission was not intended in the public interest, but was drawn by the manager and counsel of one of the Boston gas companies, to protect the companies from the people and from other companies. The commissioners, or a majority of them, were selected in accordance with the wishes of the companies.

When the investigating committee appointed by the Legislature ordered the commissioners to supply information, the Hon. George Fred Williams, counsel for the city of Boston, went to the office of the commissioners to get a copy of the returns of the gas companies. A clerk brought the copy and gave it to one of the commissioners, who took it and tore out the last leaf, saying to the clerk, "What did you put that in for?"

That leaf contained a statement of the actual cost of making and distributing gas, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that Mayor Matthews and Mr. Williams succeeded in obtaining the facts.

The companies did not wish the people to know the truth, and the commissioners allowed false statements to go out to the public year after year in their reports; refused to allow examination of these returns, though a part of the public records of the office; kept the facts to themselves during suits for reduction of rates, protecting the companies from just reductions and entailing a waste of time and money that would have been unnecessary if the facts known to the commissioners had been brought to light and acted upon; sought to suppress the facts even when ordered by legislative authority to supply them, and after all, when the "verbatim" report of the investigation was published under authority of the State, all these vastly important data were omitted, and Mayor Matthews had to have a corrected edition of the report published by the city in order to get the facts to the people.

Professor Bemis says:

"The reports of the Massachusetts Gas Commission give many valuable facts as to leakage, candle power, etc., but suppress certain vital facts necessary to the formation of a correct judgment by the people as to the reasonableness of the charges of the companies. It (the Gas Commission) has been so timid in its handling of the larger companies, so secretive in its locking up of the facts it gathers from the companies, since it is the only court on record that keeps secret the evidence on which it acts, and has produced the general impression of being so hostile to municipal ownership, that the people of Massachusetts do not consider the commission idea more than a half-way measure."

THE PHILADELPHIA CASE.

It is often stated that public ownership of gas works was a failure in Philadelphia. But this is not so. Philadelphia never had public ownership of gas works. It had government ownership of gas works. But government ownership is not public ownership, unless the people own the government.

In Philadelphia the people did not own the councils. The corporations owned them. The government itself was a private monopoly. And when the government is a private monopoly, whatever is in the hands of the government is apt to be treated as a private monopoly, also. The government is the fundamental public utility.

THE HEART OF THE PROBLEM.

If it is a good thing for one man or a thousand men to own a gas plant, then it is a good thing for a hundred thousand or half a million men to own the works that supply their gas. Would you rather be a part owner of a valuable gas plant than have some one else own it all? Rather be the owner? Same thing holds for a city.

If engineers and experts can be obtained to manage a gas system for the body of stockholders we call a corporation, engineers and experts can be secured to manage the system with equal efficiency for the body of stockholders we call the city.

The core of the matter is this: The aim of a private monopoly is private profit, while the aim of a public system is public service. The monopolists want dividends; the public desires good service at low cost.

A normal private institution aims at profit for a few; a normal public institution aims at benefit for all.

On which plan do you think our public utilities should be managed—the public utilities in which you do not hold stock, and in respect to which you may therefore be able to form an impartial judgment. Should any public utility be managed for private profit? Should not every public utility be managed in the public interest? If so, then every public utility should be public property, for private property is sure to be managed for private gain and more or less against the public interest.

The change of monopoly from private to public ownership and control means a change of purpose from dividends for a few to service for all. And this change of purpose resulting from unifying of the interests of owners and the public is the source of the improvements experienced under public ownership in respect to cheaper and better service, purer government, better paid and more contented labor, superior citizenship and a fairer diffusion of wealth and power. Civilization, manhood and even the public safety demand the change.

REVOLUTION

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Oh, you who turn rebellious eyes on fate,
Think not to find the remedy in hate.
War, the red monster, owes to hate his birth;
She is the mother of all ills on earth.
She is the foe to Progress and to Peace;
Oh, not through hate shall rank oppression cease.
Not by the bludgeon, bullet or the knife,
Not by the holocaust of human life,
Not by destruction shall the change be wrought,
But by construction and united thought.
For love of country and of home, UNITE!

Let go the bones of discord and dispute;
Sink small ambitions, and let self be mute:
Unite on precepts beautiful and broad;
Forget your dogmas, but remember God.
Be calm; in calmness lies enduring strength;
Be patient; patience brings reward at length.
Ignore self interests for the good of all.
And make us truly what we claim to be
What once we were—the country of the FREE.
Oh, not by bloodshed must the change be wrought,
But by the ballot and united thou[illegible].

Volcanic Marvels

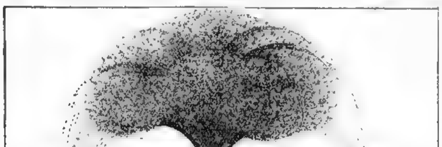
By Prof. Garrett P. Serviss

PROFESSOR SHALER [illegible] Harvard [illegible]



Origin of a Lunar Volcanic Mountain.

[illegible] accept the opinion of Gilbert that these are due to the impact of tremendous meteors striking the moon at various angles ages [illegible]

On the contrary, he is disposed to stand by the older opinion that the so-called lunar volcanoes are the products of eruption, but, [illegible]

He [illegible] the very striking [illegible] that the [illegible] shaped [illegible] on the moon may have been formed [illegible] some kind of boiling [illegible] takes place in any fluid mass that is [illegible] cooling at the surface. According to this view there was a time when the moon boiled, and the imprisoned vapor, escaping through the partly cooled crust, shaped it into the curious rings that now [illegible] into solid rock all over its surface. These rings average from a few miles to sixty or seventy miles across, and the walls of many of them form mountains thousands of feet in height.

Almost invariably, especially if it is of great size, the interior of such a ring lies far below the general surface of the moon, so that the word "cup" very well describes the phenomenon.

But while rejecting the meteoric explanation of the origin of the ring-shaped volcanoes Professor Shaler thinks it not impossible that the vast smooth dark-colored areas on the moon generally known as "seas" may have been caused by the impact of gigantic bodies.

Such a body, moving with enormous velocity and suddenly arrested by impact, would not only be melted and vaporized, but it would melt and vaporize an immense area of the moon's surface, and this molten mass on cooling would form a comparatively smooth [illegible]

There is another explanation of the origin of the ring-shaped or cup-shaped lunar volcanoes which, as far as I know, was first suggested by Messrs. Nasmyth and Carpenter in their great work on the moon, and which gives a very imposing picture of the condition of things that may once have prevailed in the lunar world, if this explanation is correct.

On the earth volcanic craters are situated at the tops of lofty peaks, which have been built up by the matter ejected from the earth's interior through the throats of the craters.

On the moon, as I have said, the volcanic craters form immense cups, many miles across, encircled by a mountain ring. Their aspect may be seen as exhibited in Fig. II, where the great floor of the crater is seen to be many thousand feet below the general surface of the moon, while around its edge a mountainous mass in the form of a ring has been piled up.

This formation suggests that when the lunar volcanoes were in action their power was so tremendous that the material ejected through their vents from the moon's interior rose to a height of perhaps forty or fifty miles. Then, falling back in vast parabolic curves, it heaped up in a circle around the vent at a distance varying from four or five up to twenty or thirty miles, a mountain in the form of a ring.

There is sometimes to be seen a small ring of piled up ashes and scoria around the [illegible] lunar volcanic craters [illegible] ejected masses [illegible] would form mountain rings about [illegible] great explosions [illegible] lunar volcanoes is to be attributed to the subsidence of the crust, owing to the withdrawal of the immense quantity of matter that was ejected through the central vent.

[illegible] gravitation on the [illegible] could favor the volcanic forces there [illegible] the materials brought up through [illegible] height and distance [illegible] the explosion might be the same, the weight to be moved, bulk for bulk, would be only one-sixth as great on the moon as on the earth.

It will also be the last week of "Brother Jacques," which Annie Russell is giving at the Park, as she will present Zangwill's new play the following week. "The Sixth Commandment" will be presented at the Castle Square and "The Man-o'-War's Man" [at] the Bowdoin.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will be the stars at Keith's, and Mme. Slapofski will be the leading feature at the Empire, formerly Music Hall.

THEATREGOERS OFFERED ATTRACTIVE LIST FOR CHOICE

Hollis Street Theatre.

Viola Allen in "The Winter's Tale," will be the attraction at the Hollis Street Theatre [illegible]. Miss Allen will [illegible] the roles of Hermione and Perdita [illegible] which was first [illegible] played [illegible] Anderson sixteen years [ago]. Whether Shakespeare intended this [illegible] both roles. The [illegible]. When the roles were [illegible] it was necessary that the [illegible] representing them should [illegible] to the [illegible] because they were mother and daughter, but for the reason that [illegible] play says that he thought of Hermione [illegible]. [illegible] of Perdita's lines are [illegible] the mother and daughter are supposed to be on the stage at the same time. Of the [illegible] of Hermione and Perdita much [illegible] has been written, [illegible] an ill-used mother, and the [illegible] playmate of flowers [illegible] of Shakespeare's dream [illegible].

[illegible] Allen may divine why she [illegible] "Winter's Tale" for presenting [illegible] Hermione and Perdita [illegible] to her. The play of course [illegible] and artists [illegible] leading company [illegible] Boyd Putnam, James Young, C. Leslie Allen and [illegible].

Tremont Theatre.

Lew Dockstader and his minstrel company will begin a two weeks' engagement at the Tremont [illegible]. Dockstader is, of course, the star of the performance, and while he sticks to the same old [illegible] suit of clothes which has been his trademark for years, he has got together an entirely new collection of jokes and songs, and they are said to be funnier than anything he has ever before offered the public. By means of some extremely clever cinematograph pictures, he gives his audience the impression that he is travelling a tremendous number of miles in his trusty airship, and finally descends from it with a parachute and delivers a monologue on the political situation. Among Dockstader's songs are "Seeing New York on a Rubberneck Hack," "Dead Wise," "Dar's a Dark Man Comin' Wid a Bundle" and "The Other Way." The performance closes with the best spectacular feature that the popular minstrel has ever shown. It shows a pond covered with water lilies, which open slowly as the music begins and disclose the head of a minstrel in the heart of each blossom. The petals of the lilies move to and fro. [illegible] Neil O'Brien, William H. Hallett, John King, Matt Keefe, Manuel Romain, William McDonald and fifty others complete the company.

Empire Theatre (Music Hall)

Hereafter the name of Boston Music Hall will exist only in memory, and the popular playhouse will henceforth be known as the Empire Theatre. The open[illegible] trance also marks an important event in this theatre's history, and will prove of great advantage to patrons. To celebrate the event an exceptionally attractive vaudeville [illegible] ance in the varieties in his own one-act comic play, "Senator McPhee," supported by a trio of capable players. Another great attraction will be Mme. Slapoffski (Frances Neilson), the famous English prima donna soprano [illegible]. A great family of bicyclists, the Jackson troupe, six in number, [illegible] leading feature. Charles Leonard Fletcher will present "An Evening with Charles Dickens" and other great novelists, in which he introduces lifelike impersonations of [illegible] acrobatic wire performers; George W. Cooper and William Robinson, and an acrobatic novelty will be shown by Simon and Paris, entitled "The Old Greeks in Olden Times."

Keith's Theatre.

The vaudeville show at Keith's for the coming week promises to be one of the strongest of the Winter. Among the celebrities announced to appear are the following: Julian Eltinge, who first acquired histrionic fame as a member of the Cadets theatricals; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in a starring dramatic playlet, "The Yellow Dragon," which is to be staged with special scenery and effects; Mme. Adelaide Herrmann and company, introducing new and original illusions; Ten Brooke and Lambert, in a musical comedy specialty; Herr Troba, a juggler of marvellous skill and strength; Ernest Hogan, the most noted of all the [illegible] Adelina Roattino, a vocalist well known in Boston, Clara Stevens, a graceful international dancer, and [illegible] and [illegible], the greatest acrobatic comedy team at present appearing in vaudeville. The usual complete change of motion pictures will be made.

Globe Theatre.

One of the leading novelties in the musical comedy field this season, and which [illegible] is "The Lost Boy," a musical gaiety, with Edward Blondell, of Katzenjammer Kid fame, playing the leading role. It will be the attraction at the Globe Theatre, Boston, [illegible] to-morrow. The [illegible] up to date [illegible] new comedy characters are introduced. The fun is said to be fast and furious and the lines bright, sparkling and bubbling over with genuine humor. There is no deep thinking plot, no special reason for the things said and done [illegible], and that is what [illegible]. Mr. Blondell has been surrounded by a clever acting company, attractively and superbly gowned. Elaborate sets of scenery are carried for each act, and the musical and song hits introduced are said to be of the bright and catchy order which appeal to the popular ear. The chorus is asserted to be one of the features of the company for the beauty of its female contingent and for its well trained voices.

Grand Opera House.

"Escaped From the Harem" is the title of the [illegible] for the coming week [at] the Grand Opera House. The story of the play is founded upon facts personally [illegible] American [illegible] in Persia, which has been elaborated upon by the author to make a story of heart interest, sensation and bright comedy. Sensational melodramatic situations follow each other in rapid succession.

The plot tells of a travelling prince from the East, looking for the most beautiful [illegible] of his harem. A beautiful girl is kidnapped and taken by the prince to India, where she finally gains the sympathy of the inmates of the castle, who help her [illegible]. There are strenuous scenes [illegible] effects, and many [illegible] the climax of [illegible] the heroine escapes on the back of an elephant, pursued by the Persian slaves of her master. The company is supplemented by a number of pretty girls, who appear in the harem scene clad in the native costume of Persia.

Howard Athenaeum.

Another great list of variety people is down for appearance at the Howard this week, headed by the Marco Twins, the funniest of all eccentric comedians. Then there will be Emil Hoch, Jane Elton and company, in a one-act comedy "Mlle. Ricci." The Fitzgibbon McCoy trio, composed of Alice and Bert Fitzgibbon, and Tom McCoy, a clever Irish comedian, have a new sketch called "A Mischievous Brother." Musical Kleist is another one of the big ones. He mingles music, comedy and black art, picking the instruments he plays from the air. Arthur Whitelaw, "The Irish American," will have a lot of funny stories. The Messenger boy [illegible] will have an exceptionally funny act, with songs, dances and burlesque on the messenger service. Another fine act will be that of Hathaway and Walton, two dancers, who have made a tremendous hit wherever they have appeared. Among the others who will appear are Al Carleton [illegible] Zarnes, in an act on the Roman rings; [illegible] and Lorette, clever "coons"; Butler and Lamar, sketch artists, and [illegible] Browne, mimic and vocalist.

Boston Theatre.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" begins the last week of her short engagement at the Boston Theatre to-morrow [illegible] at the Boston Theatre has been a record breaking, and never before in the history of the house has a play been more favorably received. Boston is hungry for fun such as is provided [illegible] by the philosophy of the [illegible] and [illegible] the rule all through the reign of this chatelaine of the shanty. The piece has been produced at the Boston upon an unusual scale. The great stage and wonderful mechanical equipment have enabled the [illegible] to reproduce the locale of the piece with absolute fidelity to the original Cabbage Patch in Louisville, where the author found her remarkable characters. Nothing but praise has been spoken regarding the work of Madge Carr [illegible] Helen Lowell in the four leading r[illegible].

Majestic Theatre.

Only one week remains of the engagement of Wright Lorimer in "The Shepherd King" at the Majestic, and those who have not yet seen this magnificent production should arrange to do so without delay, as it will likely be a long time before it is again presented in this city. The coming week will be the fifth of the present engagement and the eleventh at the Majestic this season. It is one of the most notable presentations that has been made in a long time, and in the quality of its production it has never been surpassed. The armors and properties are all real, and the stage settings [illegible] of the life of Judea in the time of David.

Colonial Theatre.

William Faversham will enter upon the second and last week of his engagement at the Colonial Theatre to-morrow evening, continuing the success he has won in Pinero's latest play, "Letty." The chance to see the star of "Lord and Lady Algy" in a new play by the author of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" is easily one of the events of the dramatic season, and the audiences of the past week have been the finest that Mr. Faversham has ever attracted to Boston. Splendid acting marks the interpretation of the play, and the efforts of the [illegible] players, foremost among whom are Carlotta Nason, June Opp, Arthur Playfair, Eliza Williams, Olive Oliver and Katherine Florence and Marjory Taylor.

Park Theatre.

Annie Russell and "Brother Jacques" [illegible] at the Park [illegible] brilliant an engagement as that which they enjoyed in New York. This sparkling comedy from the French is a worthy successor to "Mice and Men," in which Miss Russell played so long an engagement here last season, but there will be no chance for such a run as was played with that work. The coming week is all that can be devoted to "Brother Jacques," since the third and last week of Miss Russell's stay in this city is to be given to the first production upon any stage of "Jinny the Carrier," an entirely new drama by Israel Zangwill. February 20 will be the date of the first hearing of this work.

Castle Square Theatre.

The attraction at the Castle Square Theatre the coming week will be "The Sixth Commandment," a new play by Perry Seymour. It has had stock company presentations in Chicago and San Francisco, and that at the Castle Square will make its third. The action of the play passes in England and the story deals with incidents growing out of the complications in which a Russian woman has been [illegible] with the secret police of her country. It is said to be a strong and interesting drama. Howell Hansel, John Waldron, De Witt C. Jennings, A. H. Van Buren, Edward Morton, Lillian Kemble, [illegible] Starr and Sadie Galloupe will be in the cast.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

J. W. [illegible] "The Man-o'-War's Man" will be presented [illegible] stock company at the Bowdoin Square Theatre the coming week. [illegible] action of the play takes [illegible] nearly around the world [illegible] portunity for a [illegible] stage settings, of which full [illegible] will be taken.

Columbia Music Hall.

The Kentucky Belles will begin a return engagement at the Columbia Music Hall to-morrow. This organization [illegible] here a few weeks [illegible] return will be heartily welcomed by the patrons of the [illegible] Masqueraders," with Reid and [illegible] in the principal roles, forms the major portion of the entertainment and the olio includes the Luigi brothers, Terry, Elmer and their company, Aleene and Hamilton, and the Reliance Quartette.

Lyceum Theatre.

The Dainty [illegible] will [illegible] Theatre for [illegible] given by this [illegible] bright and up-to-date [illegible] two burlesques, "W[illegible] at the Seashore [illegible] Charles R[illegible] and Sadie [illegible] sketch; Gray and Graham, musical comedians; Ranzetta and De Lair, comedy acrobats, Nina Worth, and Hurd and [illegible].

Palace Theatre.

The Rentz Santley company, which comes to the Palace Theatre for a week's engagement to-morrow, has been before the public for more [illegible] century, and has always [illegible] among the organizations [illegible] "Looping the World," an extravaganza will be given, and in the olio will [illegible] such people as Ernest and Clara [illegible], Hawthorne and Burt, Cliff [illegible], Bijou Comedy Four, Charles D[illegible] [illegible].

Austin & Stone's Museum.

Old Zip, famous as Barnum's "What is It?" has proved such a popular feature at Austin & Stone's Museum that he will be retained for a second week. Other features will be Billy Wells, the man with the adamantine skull; Ida Irwin, the upside down man; the D'Alvinos, in modern magic; Raymond and Seelo [illegible] boxing experts, Mabel Hilton, the girl with the long hair, and De Forrest's dog and monkey circus. Colonel A. H. White's Lutstead [illegible] novation, a new [illegible] in minstrelsy, will be the feature of the stage show.

To-night's Concerts.

Heading the list of [illegible] concert to-night will be Lorimer [illegible] edy sketch, "A Wife for a [illegible]" [illegible] some new ideas in the [illegible] line are promised. As [illegible] two [illegible] other acts, all chosen for the sole purpose [illegible].

J[illegible] BOSTON AMERICAN'S [illegible] was a [illegible] what will [illegible] the [illegible] of letters which [illegible] from those who are glad to tell [illegible] BOSTON AMERICAN have sent in their re[illegible] been [illegible] world, the [illegible] of New England take the [illegible] who sent in a recipe must make coffee for someone every morning. Most of these [illegible] sufficient of the beverage for from four to [illegible] eight persons. It must be their daily [illegible] vided for the delectation of the [illegible] just to [illegible] Of course [illegible] which need not be discussed here. [illegible] ing, for the sake of argument, that coffee [illegible] well have it made right. Coffee that is boiled too long is bound to [illegible] good coffee if you will [illegible] directions implicitly.

Of the thousands of recipes which were received, the following were deemed worthy of special mention by the judges.

An Old-Timer

I send my recipe for making coffee which I have used for thirty nine years, and I don't think the young folks can better it. Make a small bag out of a piece of cheese cloth and into it put one cup of ground coffee, then tie the bag so that none of the coffee grounds can get into the coffee. Rinse your coffee pot well with hot water and put your bag containing the coffee into it. Then pour in one quart of hot water and let it come to a boil. Then stir in one egg well beaten and let it boil for five minutes; serve with milk or cream.

MRS. ELLEN McDONOUGH.
No. 512 Medford street, Charlestown.

Cork Up the Spout

Mix the coffee smooth in cold water with a little white of an egg; add one cup cold water to each tablespoon coffee and set the coffee pot on the stove, stopping up the spout with a cork to preserve all the aroma. Let it just come to a boil, but not boil.

MRS. W. C. SILVER.
No. 28 Hancock street.

Drink Hearty

To one cup of coffee allow one heaping tablespoonful of Mocha and Java. Make in a china pot. Pour boiling water over it, allowing one cup of water to each spoonful of coffee, let stand ten or fifteen minutes, and it will be as clear as crystal. Allow one-third cup of cream; pour coffee over; sweeten and drink hearty.

MISS MYRTLE OSBORNE.
No. 59 North Russell street, Boston.

Boiled Coffee

One cup ground coffee, one egg, one cup cold water, six cups boiling water. Scald the coffee pot, then add the coffee. Wash the egg and break it into the pot. Stir well and add one-half cup cold water. When thoroughly mixed add the six cups boiling water. Place on the range and allow to boil three minutes. Then draw pot to the back of the range, where it will keep hot, but not boil. Add the remaining half cup cold water and let it stand ten minutes before serving. If any coffee is left over, drain from the grounds and save for coffee jelly or other dessert. This recipe will make coffee to serve ten people.

MRS. P. L. PAQUETTE.
No. 82 Portland street, Worcester.

One Good Way

If you use a metal coffee pot be quite sure that it is absolutely clean. China or earthern pots are best to use, as they are more readily cleansed. The best coffee cannot be expected if you use coffee already ground. If you have no grinder buy one and adjust it to make a fine powder. One ounce of the fine ground coffee makes a beverage as strong as three ounces of the coarse ground.

Each half pint of water requires a heaping tablespoon of coffee ground to a powder. This powder is placed in a thick flannel cloth and laid in a strainer, the boiling water (it must be boiling) is poured over it and allowed to percolate into the pot. The flannel should not be porous, else the fine powder will also find its way through to the pot below. Like other hot beverages, it should be served immediately.

No. 667 Eighth street, South Boston.

How to Make Coffee

To six tablespoons of coffee add the beaten white of an egg and mix thoroughly, add one pint of clear cold water; boil for twenty minutes. Pour in a cup of cold water and boil for five minutes longer. Serve with whipped cream or good rich [illegible] slightly whipped to make it frothy.

HIS SECOND VALENTINE

BY DOROTHY DIX.

IT'S NO USE, OUR MARRIAGE IS A FAILURE.
IF YOU LOVE ME LIKE I LOVE YOU
NO KNIFE CAN CUT OUR LOVE IN TWO.
HELLO TOMMY POETRY?

“IT'S no use, Arthur,” said the woman, looking straight before her and speaking in a dull monotone to keep her voice from trembling. “It's no use. Our marriage is a failure. I do nothing but make you miserable with my reproaches. You break my heart by your neglect, and we should both be better off, and—and—happier—if I went abroad indefinitely. That's the haven, you know, of the virtuous [illegible] of the people who are separated with[illegible]

“Oh, I'm not blaming you,” she went on wearily. “I suppose it is [illegible] was bound to come [illegible] the fire of love [illegible] down, and leave nothing but ashes on the hearthstone. Only, it chills me to death,” and she shivered as she drew her lace-trimmed morning gown [illegible] about her shoulders.

“Well, of all the unreasonable women in the world you are the most illogical,” the [illegible] began [illegible] and [illegible] turned [illegible] talk [illegible] happy? [illegible] diamonds and horses and [illegible] What more do you want?”

“Nothing, nothing,” she answered with a bitter smile that was not good to see. “I have diamonds and automobiles—what more could a woman want?”

The man arose and began putting on his topcoat [illegible] when you thought yourself fortunate to have a shabby house on a shabby street and [illegible] he sneered.

[illegible] the woman under her breath as she watched him walk down the street, “but I had you then.”

An hour later Arthur Ellington, millionaire merchant and director in half a dozen gigantic enterprises [illegible] grew suspicious [illegible] and passed with [illegible] to his private office, whose [illegible] was guarded by a seedy [illegible] hard, shrewd, worldly wise little [illegible] looked as if it might have worn out a dozen such bodies as the one it surmounted.

The swing door fell softly to behind him, and in the doorway Ellington paused, for perched upon a stool, his thin little legs [illegible] like grasp was Tommy [illegible] the throes of literary composition. [illegible] sight was an unusual one, for Tommy, when not professionally engaged, was accustomed to beguile his leisure with “The Bandit's Bride,” or “Three-Fingered Dan, the Terror of the Spanish Main,” or literature of like character, and Ellington smiled with cynical amusement at the spectacle of him turned author.

“Hello, Tommy,” he [illegible]

“Oh,” answered Ellington, with a sudden liking for the boy he never felt before. He was a [illegible] appealed to him. [illegible]

Tommy handed over [illegible]

“[illegible] love me [illegible] I love [illegible]

Say, ain't that a Jim Dandy? Ain't it a corker?” the boy asked [illegible]

[illegible]

“Aw, [illegible]” [illegible] boy. [illegible] goin' to send no valentine [illegible] last year de place where I works de boss had me hot-footing it all day to swell de dolls' houses wid violets and candy all done up like they was hearts. Ain't youse goin' to send one to your best girl?”

“No,” said Ellington carelessly, “I am [illegible]

“When [illegible] tooth [illegible]

“Oh, [illegible],” replied Ellington [illegible] don't [illegible] pay your wives so many attentions as you do your sweetheart, you know.”

“Huh,” grunted the boy, “I'm on. Before youse [illegible] you pushes de velvet [illegible] worth [illegible] but as soon as youse gets de [illegible] youse get the cold feet and [illegible]

“You don't understand what you are talking about,” Ellington replied with a [illegible]

[illegible] and getting de black eye, and goes out scrubbing to support de family, and swears she's got the best husband in de world! And dere's Mrs. Flannigan, whose husband never gives her a lick nor a [illegible], and she's [illegible] of Mr. O'Hagan.”

“Well, send your valentine,” said Ellington, “[illegible] stamp it,” and with [illegible] he passed to his private room.

It was a [illegible] for him. [illegible] went. [illegible] Messenger with [illegible] but through it all ran the undercurrent of what the boy had said about valentines and love. He had left home with a heart full of [illegible]

[illegible] Who knows [illegible] “My valentine,” she [illegible] my heart, have you come back [illegible]

It Is Wrong

To Suffer From a Germ Disease. Ask Us for Liquozone—Free.

Those who suffer from germ troubles, and who do not use Liquozone are wronging themselves. You will know how much when you try it. Most of these troubles are so unnecessary—so easily cured—it is wrong to let them continue.

What reason can one find to hesitate? A trial of Liquozone costs not a penny. We will gladly buy the first bottle for any new user, and pay the druggist ourselves for it. Won't you—if you need it—accept that gift?

Liquozone is not unknown now—not untried. It has cured millions of germ troubles—troubles that drugs can't cure. There is no neighborhood—no hamlet so remote—that has not instances of what Liquozone has done. The cured ones are everywhere; doubtless some of your friends are among them.

You will regret these days of waiting when you learn what Liquozone does. You will wish you had abandoned wrong methods and tried the right one sooner. Please ask about Liquozone to-day.

Not Medicine.

Liquozone is not made, like medicine, by compounding acids and drugs; nor is there any alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas, made in large part from the best oxygen producers. The process of making takes 14 days, and requires immense apparatus. At the end of two weeks, we get one cubic inch of Liquozone for each 1,250 cubic inches of gas used. The attainment of this product has, for more than twenty years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research.

The main result is, to get into a liquid, and thus into the blood, a powerful, yet harmless germicide. And the product is so helpful—so good for you under any condition—that even a well person feels its instant benefit. This is the product which in the past two years has sprung into world-wide use in the treatment of germ diseases. It is now used by the sick of nine nations; by physicians and hospitals everywhere. It is daily used in millions of homes in America.

Two Million Dollars

Have been spent to make Liquozone known. We have bought the first bottle and given it free to every sick one we learned of. The result is that one home in five, the country over, has some one whom Liquozone has cured. These homes are scattered everywhere. Your neighbors and friends live in some of them. If you will only ask what Liquozone does there are millions to tell you about it.

And we paid $100,000 for the simple right to make Liquozone—the American rights. The rights in other countries have sold for proportionate sums. We mention this fact to indicate the recognized value of Liquozone. Men have never before paid such a price for any discovery used in the cure of sickness.

Before we bought Liquozone we had it tested for years, through physicians and hospitals in this country and others. We had it employed in every stage of every germ disease; in thousands of the most difficult cases obtainable. For two years, in many a disease called incurable, we proved that Liquozone did what medicine could not do. That was the reason for its price.

How Liquozone Cures

The greatest value of Liquozone lies in the fact that it kills germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. And no man knows another way to do it. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. For that reason, medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease.

Liquozone is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. Yet it is not only harmless but of wonderful benefit—better than anything else in the world for you. No one is so well that he cannot be helped by it.

The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter. To the human body Liquozone is exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying—the most needful, the most helpful thing possible. But to germs it is certain destruction; and these facts are true of nothing else in existence.

Germ Diseases

These are the known germ diseases; all due to germs or to the poisons which germs create. These are the diseases to which medicine does not apply, for drugs cannot kill inside germs.

All that medicine can do for these troubles is to act as a tonic, aiding Nature to overcome the germs. But those results are indirect and uncertain, depending on the patient's condition. A cure is always doubtful when drugs are used, and some of these diseases medicine never cures.

Liquozone alone can destroy the cause of these troubles. It goes wherever the blood goes, so that no germ can escape it. The results are almost inevitable. Diseases which have resisted medicine for years yield at once to Liquozone. “Incurable” diseases are cured by it. In any stage of any disease in this list the results are so certain that we will gladly send to any patient who asks it an absolute guaranty.

Social Tragedy

Women Who Brave Death for Social Honors.

In the midst of one of the most brilliant social functions of the season, a noted society woman started suddenly from her chair with a scream of agony and fell insensible to the floor.

A few hours later the distinguished physician told her anxious husband that she was suffering from an acute case of nervous prostration brought on by female trouble, and hinted at an operation. Fortunately a friend advised her to try

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The result was that she escaped the surgeon's knife and to-day is a well woman.

The derangement of the delicate female organism sets every nerve in the body quivering with pain. Headaches, backaches, torturing bearing down pains and dragging sensations make women nervous and hysterical.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was troubled for eight years with irregularities which broke down my system and brought on extreme nervousness and hysteria. I could neither enjoy my meals nor sleep nights, became easily irritated and nervous and very despondent. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound proved to be the only medicine which helped me. After taking the third bottle, my general health began to improve. At the end of the fifth month I was well and could attend to my household and social duties and enjoy life. MRS. CHESTER CURRY, 42 Saratoga Street, East Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Curry, whose portrait appears on the right, is the leader of the Ladies' Symphony Orchestra. The following letter is from Miss Goode, President of the Bryn Mawr Lawn Tennis Club of Chicago:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I tried many different remedies to try to build up my system, which had become run down from loss of proper rest and unseasonable hours, but nothing seemed to help me. Mother is a great advocate of Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles, having used it herself some years ago with great success. So I began to take it, and in less than a month I was able to be out of bed and out of doors, and in three months I was entirely well. Really I have never felt so strong and well as I have since. MISS CORA GOODE, 355 E. Chicago Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Ethel Barrymore

Loves Music Her Horse Her Gowns

Hates Society Critics Flattery

by Eleanor Ames

A Heart-to-Heart Talk With the Young Theatrical Star on Her Violent Likes and Dislikes.

A SMARTLY [illegible] to a [illegible] parlor on the top floor of the [illegible] informed me that Miss Barrymore would [illegible]

There were flowers everywhere [illegible] with [illegible] roses drooped over the edge of [illegible] glass bowl.

[illegible] Ethel Barrymore slipped into [illegible] greeting, [illegible] to the corner of the divan [illegible] side of the [illegible] and turned [illegible] questioning's [illegible] clasped her hands with an air of resignation.

[illegible] for [illegible] I was to [illegible] there [illegible] parlor which [illegible] in its ornate wall paper [illegible] Barrymore was sitting [illegible] attitude and [illegible] expression [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Lionel [illegible] little laugh [illegible]

[illegible] went [illegible] that it was [illegible]

[illegible] Miss Barrymore [illegible] and that I wish some [illegible] affair and pleading another engagement.

[illegible] the droopiness of the [illegible] of the shoulders, so familiar on the stage [illegible] home. In almost any [illegible] these would be awkward [illegible] In Ethel Barrymore they are [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Barrymore's stage [illegible] grew out of [illegible] so slender [illegible] that she can [illegible] things denied her [illegible]

[illegible] woman [illegible] throat [illegible] exquisite [illegible]

There were shirrings and headings and puffs of [illegible] forming a billowy [illegible] which rightly deserved the name [illegible] confection. [illegible] about her shoulders was a rose pink [illegible] scarf which Miss Barrymore held tight [illegible] as though it were [illegible] horseshoe [illegible] of her [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] hair [illegible] was parted loosely in a semi-pompadour effect and tied in a [illegible] low in her neck by a big black bow.

There was not the slightest suggestion of the stage about her. She was just a bright, fresh [illegible] carefree girl. [illegible] but I'm sure she would deny the charge.

Emphatically [illegible] Barrymore declared [illegible] for society, and that she [illegible] And the tone in which the declaration was made left no doubt that the accusation was resented.

"The newspapers have made me out a society girl," she said, "but truly I am not and I do not care for it. I have no time for it. The stage is my life. Why should I want anything greater? Where else could I be happy? My people have all been on the stage for generations. Where else should I be?"

"But," I said, "it seems to me that one is always hearing of your being here or there at some function."

"Through the newspapers," she persisted calmly. "Lots and lots of times I'm not really there at all.

"Of course many of my very dearest friends are society people, and I accept their hospitality.

"But nowadays I never meet any new people. I make it a rule never to see people whom I do not know, unless there is some special reason why I should want to know them, some reason why they would interest me particularly."

The Newspapers Again

"Still," I persisted, "that does not deter you from having a fashionable following of society in your theatrical life." She smiled a little enigmatical smile. Lionel smiles a smile of the same pattern.

"More work of the newspapers," she said. "They always put a list of the society people present at the end of the criticism of the play. Really and truly I'd be enormously pleased and relieved to have the curtain go up some night and [illegible] in vain [illegible] evening dress in the entire audience."

I looked doubtful.

"Yes, I would," she emphasized.

When the average woman becomes emphatic or excited her voice grows shrill, and the pitch rises. With Ethel Barrymore her voice deepens with earnestness. It is a peculiar voice. Lionel was the same. "Jack" Barrymore was somewhat similar.

Her Marvellous Voice

It is full and deep and throaty. There is a huskiness which never wears off, and which makes the average clear voice seem thin and rasping by contrast.

"Many people think I have a cold," said [illegible] "Even critics have written that Miss Barrymore was suffering from a bad cold,' when I was never so well in my life."

[illegible] Is Her Hobby

[illegible] divides Miss Barrymore's interest [illegible]

"I love [illegible]," she said, her eyes grown [illegible] with feeling and wide with [illegible] "It was to have been my life. I [illegible] to be a professional pianist, but [illegible] had to go on the stage, and now [illegible] has become an accompaniment.

"[illegible] I still study. I could never give it up, but it is secondary. As a child I played enormously well and they all had great hopes of me. But now, I think Lionel is going to carry off the musical honors for the family."

"Enormously" is a favorite adverb with Miss Barrymore. She uses it often, and she speaks it so that the significance of the meaning come out with full force [illegible] seems to be almost [illegible] superlative.

Delightful [illegible]

She has a [illegible] of [illegible] giving to each word its rightful [illegible] and [illegible] its proper [illegible] There is the faint suggestion of an English accent at times, but it is only a suggestion, for Miss Barrymore is above all intensely American.

Indeed she is typically American. Perhaps I should modify that last statement, for she is so essentially individual and so apparently independent of exterior influence that it would be [illegible] anything but "typically Ethel Barrymore."

Between Lionel and Ethel Barrymore there is an unusual closeness of sympathy [illegible] by their music.

"When we are together," she said, "we sit up half the night talking music and playing. I love to play Lionel's compositions. It all seems so wonderful to me, for years ago it was I who seemed to have a monopoly on music in the family.

"It's such a recent thing with Lionel. He always played ragtime better than anybody I ever knew in my life, but his compositions are [illegible] I feel sure [illegible] a great future [illegible]

Sinks When She Sits Down

At the same time, just because she sinks effectively and is droopy, and doesn't hold her shoulders quite straight, it is not safe to attempt an imitation of Ethel Barrymore's manner, and poses belonging to her self.

Dearly Loves Her Gowns

We finally reached the subject of gowns in our conversation. Mrs. Osborn creates the Barrymore gowns, but the wearer has more or less to say about them.

"I think it is an evidence of great stupidity," she declared, "for people who have any money at all to dress in bad taste. It seems to me a necessity to dress well if one hopes to be considered worth while and intelligent.

"Clothes are so often the standard by which people judge us that it seems to [illegible] to [illegible] that [illegible] I begin to wonder what is wrong with her."

Woman's Duty to Dress Well.

You know the exquisite harmony of the Barrymore gowns in every play, and how they usually express the various notes in one color scale.

It is Miss Barrymore's own idea, carrying the same color throughout the play, and having the gowns shade from one to another instead of having the scarlet frock of the first act hurling itself athwart the purple gown in the second, and both doing [illegible] against the vivid green of the third act.

But she gives no more thought to the selection of her gowns than she does to her manner of speech.

And that last goes over the heads of lots of people," she said. "I sustain a certain manner of speech from the beginning of the play to the end and then people say, 'She is not acting. It is perfectly natural.'

"Why, it's only the greatest technique that can make one seem to be always natural. Now in 'Sunday' I speak always with a marked Western accent. I can't explain it, but you know that the most prominent feature about it is the pronunciation of the r's.

"Well someone said the other day that I had such a queer way of speaking, that I rolled my r's, not certainly, and that it was perfectly natural. Well, there couldn't be any greater compliment, I think."

A Matinee Girl Herself

When Ethel Barrymore is not on the stage of a theatre you may be pretty sure she is in the audience of one. She goes to a matinee every day when she does not have one herself, and declares that while once she "longed for a place in the country, miles from nowhere," she knows that she would be perfectly miserable away from the lights of the theatre."

Horseback riding forms Ethel Barrymore's chief exercise.

"I play tennis after a fashion," she says, "when I find myself on a tennis court with a racquet in my hand. And I play golf when occasion seems to demand it, but I don't believe I could be called athletic."

Loves Horses and Dogs.

"If I had a place in the country I'd have lots of horses and some dogs. A little dog for a pet?" She shivered in alarm. "Nothing could induce me to have one around," she said solemnly, "nothing in the world.

"In that respect I'm afraid I'm not a true Barrymore," she added, "for my father would have a dozen dogs in a room no bigger than this and would hunt for space to crowd in a few more."

Externals have a decided influence upon artistic temperaments.

"Isn't the view gorgeous, from here?" she asked, lifting her head high as she looked across the room and out of the window across snow drifts, trees and houses to the Charles River.

Has Many Callers.

"It makes up for the smallness of the room. The [illegible] I had before had [illegible] that glared at me and no view [illegible]"

[illegible] was a knock at the door, to Miss Barrymore's hearty "come in," Mrs. "Jack" Pal[illegible] called by many "the most beautiful woman in Boston society," entered, laden with the cello which she plays with such consummate skill.

"Ah, you've brought the dear old fiddle," said Miss Barrymore as she welcomed her, "you know what I like," and her face grew radiant in anticipation of the music she loves so well.

Radiates Individuality.

I came away and left her to steep her soul [illegible] And I carried with [illegible] impression of a remarkable young woman clad in pale pink chiffon curled in the corner of a divan.

Ethel Barrymore has more individuality than almost any girl I ever met. She radiates it.

Then she has a world of independence. It shows in the firmly held head with the slightly uptilted chin.

She values her ability at a high rate, which is a most admirable trait, for it tells of great self respect. She is frank and outspoken, yet conservative.

Ability Only at the Bud.

Above all she is [illegible] and earnest and sincere, and after you have met her you cease to wonder at the success she has attained and begin to predict far greater things for her in the future.

The natural bloom will be far more wondrous.

And yet will she ever be any better to look upon than now, with the child's expression still lurking about the eyes and cheeks and mouth, and the exquisite peach blow that not yet faded from her skin.

Lines are foreign to her face, and the Cupid's bow mouth can never be more bewitching [illegible] than now, as it is beginning to assume the strength of the woman while it retains the sweetness of the child.

COAL TRUST SHIFTING ISSUE.

SAYS COMPLAINANT HAD SUFFERED NO INJURY

Argument Made That Allowing Such Proceedings Encouraged Litigation.

REPEATS THE THREAT OF LOSS TO MINERS

Commission Says Complaint Was Properly Brought and Would Be Heard.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Washington, Feb. 11.—Attorney John T. Kerr of the New York, Ontario & Western, based his "argument" to-day before the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Hearst suit to dissolve the grinding coal trust largely on his objection to newspaper cartoons and newspaper methods.

The threat that a decision of the Commission in favor of the complainant would affect the wages of the miners was also again made openly and insinuated in nearly all of the speeches made for the defence.

The amount which the miners are expected to lose has been in an ascending scale. First it was alleged they would lose about $2,000,000 annually. To-day it was asserted that they would lose $3,500,000, but eventually the figures were revised to $3,000,000. The morning session was occupied by Judge Campbell and Attorney Louis Carr of the Delaware & Hudson. Judge Campbell was asked a leading and illuminating question by Commissioner Prouty.

Judge Campbell had taken the ground that it would be immoral to inquire into the present enormous loss of business of the roads as entering into the present contentions.

Commissioner Prouty asked: "Do you hold that if a given rate on a [illegible] volume of traffic for a certain number of years was reasonable and if the [illegible] were [illegible] it would be [illegible] [illegible] consider [illegible] basis for the reduction of the rate?"

Judge Campbell replied, "Yes, sir, I think so."

Would Limit the Field.

This conclusion of Judge Campbell, it appears, would limit the field which the commissioners have a right to inquire into and is opposed to the practice of the commission.

Mr. Carr then reviewed the whole case from the standpoint of defendant and admitted nothing that was charged in the complaint. Mr. Carr spoke rapidly and had the case at his finger's ends from his point of view. He [illegible] a good deal to say about public clamor and maintained that there was nothing in the case outside of that clamor.

Mr. Kerr then began his argument and said in part:

"I want to say something about the character of this proceeding. The Commission is of course aware that at the opening of the proceedings it was stated that the complainant had suffered no pecuniary damage by reason of his allegations and it has been urged that he had no cause to bring the proceeding.

"It is plain under the circumstances that if the complainant should lose the suit he cannot be called on to pay costs, etc. Now Mr. Hearst is reported to be a man of liberal education, great talents and possessed of large means. He is the proprietor of several newspapers. He has been through some campaigns and acquired a seat in Congress. It has been stated the proceeding was begun for the benefit of the public. It was begun just after the coal strike. First newspapers were circulated in that field, and cartoons and lampoons were circulated which held up the employers to ridicule. Mr. Shearn, the counsel for the outside, has criticised the motives of all those interested on this side as tricks and devices."

Shearn Makes Objection.

Mr. Shearn (interrupting): But what was said on this side was based entirely on evidence and remarks of counsel might well be confined to the record here.

Mr. Kerr—I think my line of argument is entirely proper.

Mr. Shearn—I would submit the matter to the Commission.

The Commissioners held a consultation, after which Chairman Knapp said: "We assume, Mr. Kerr, that counsel will observe the proprieties and the limits within which a case can be discussed, and that he will not transgress them."

Mr. Shearn—I think he has transgressed already.

Chairman Knapp—And the Commission cannot be influenced by such matters as these.

Mr. Kerr then went over the conditions of the strike and its settlement by the Anthracite Coal Commission, and declared that there was an agitation to reopen the whole question and to "keep alive" the feeling against the coal companies. Following up this line he said Mr. Hearst filed a petition in this case claiming that it was on behalf of the public and of the independents.

Mr. Kerr declared substantially that if the conditions had been such as were depicted by Mr. Hearst's counsel it ought to have been easy to have gotten some really injured person to make the complaint. He asserted that if the Hearst suit should be won the miners would be

DIRECTORS TRY TO END NEW HAVEN CONTROVERSY.

New York, Feb. 11.—The dispute between the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, was formally taken up by the Board of Directors at a meeting to-day.

The directors appointed a committee to meet a committee from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen to consider the situation.

The trouble between the railroad and the firemen grew out of a dispute between the latter organization and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

The real seriousness of the situation became apparent several days ago, when it was stated that the same issues which had arisen on the New Haven road were to be brought by the firemen before the officers of the Pennsylvania and Boston & Maine railroads.

NEVER HAS OCCASION TO BORROW MONEY

By Victor A. Watson.

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

New York, Feb. 11.—For the first time since [illegible] Chadwick [illegible] became public, Andrew Carnegie, whose name was signed to $1[illegible] worth of fraudulent notes, this [illegible] discussed the Chadwick case and gave to a representative of Prosecutor Keeler, of Cuyahoga County, O., an outline of the testimony that he would swear to in March, when will be exposed the way his name was used in the wrecking of a bank, the ruining of many lives and the death from a broken heart of bank President Beckwith of Oberlin, O.

The interview with the representative of Mr. Keeler lasted an hour and a half. This representative was Victor A. Watson, [illegible] correspondent and writer for the AMERICAN. Mr. Watson was able to give Mr. Carnegie a great deal of information about the case that the great iron master [illegible] possess before. As one of the representatives of Prosecutor Keeler and [illegible] was in charge of the staff of men who investigated the great Chadwick [illegible] for the Hearst newspapers, he was [illegible] of many secrets of the prosecution which have never yet been disclosed in newspapers.

Mr. Carnegie Interviewed.

Mr. Keeler [illegible] spoke with Mr. Watson [illegible] AMERICAN and Journal of whatever Mr. Carnegie had said.

The [illegible] was at his home at No. [illegible] Fifth avenue when the interview [illegible] in an attractive [illegible] His [illegible] to grasp details aided [illegible] crowding [illegible] the hour and a half [illegible] with the famous story [illegible] his [illegible] he had finished [illegible] was the most remarkable story he had ever heard.

Mr. Carnegie spoke with the utmost freedom and fond of [illegible] as in case he always [illegible] as showing [illegible] man of finance to believe [illegible] would borrow money from such a person [illegible] He spoke of [illegible] the Pittsburg millionaire and [illegible] were [illegible] of $[illegible]

And Mr. Carnegie [illegible] threw back his head and seemed to think it the best joke he had ever heard.

He had been served with a subpoena [illegible] States Marshal [illegible] the United States Court in Cleveland March [illegible] several [illegible] before [illegible] Fifth [illegible]

Mrs. Chadwick has caused us a lot of trouble, hasn't she?" he said. "I was just getting ready to go South for a little vacation when I got the subpoena to-day."

"And you will obey it?"

Will Go to Cleveland.

"Why, surely, of course. It is very inconvenient and I would give a lot rather than lose my trip, but no man should ever disobey a court summons. The courts are very important and everybody should consider them so. It is my duty as a citizen to go to Cleveland to testify and I shall [illegible] I wouldn't be a good [illegible]"

[illegible] stood a moment, and then Mr. Carnegie, turning, said:

"[illegible] if we're going to [illegible] this Chadwick affair [illegible] I know there is a lot [illegible] I suppose you [illegible] on this case as a newspaper man [illegible] tell me all about it," he said.

"There are many things about it that I would like you to tell me. Now, personally, of course, you are thoroughly convinced that this thing is all a fraud and that there is no relation between Mrs. Chadwick and me, are you not?" he asked.

"I was convinced of that personally early in the case," I replied.

"Admitted She Was Lying."

"But do you suppose anybody believes it?"

"I think the general public, because of the attitude of the newspapers, is thorough-

ARCHBISHOP WILLIAMS GIVES THANKS

SAFELY PASSES ONE SEVERE ORDEAL.

ABLE TO GO OUT FOR A CARRIAGE RIDE

Statement by His Grace Archbishop Williams to his people of the New England Archdiocese:

"In this, certainly one of the greatest ordeals of my whole life, I feel that I have been strengthened and that success has attended the efforts of my physicians largely through the prayers of my people. I pray for them and thank them."

Throughout all New England prayers of thanksgiving will be offered to-day for the success of operation on Archbishop Williams at the Carney Hospital for cataract of [illegible] eye and of petition for a complete restoration of sight to the aged prelate [illegible] second operation to be performed [illegible] upon the left eye. The venerable Archbishop is at present [illegible] in his private [illegible] at the Carney Hospital. Nurses [illegible] for the care of patients [illegible] constant attendance [illegible] the noted eye specialist, of No. 18[illegible] street, and [illegible] while [illegible] Dr. [illegible] Blake [illegible]

Goes for Carriage Ride.

For the first time since entering the hospital [illegible] for a short drive in a closed carriage [illegible] accompanied by Dr. Blake. He [illegible] at being [illegible] and [illegible] desire that he [illegible] soon be able to leave the institution for good, and [illegible] management of the New England archdiocese.

Throughout his stay at the hospital the Archbishop has been kept informed of all diocesan affairs. The welfare of his people is a matter of [illegible] to him, and it is of them that he [illegible] and for them that he prays each day.

It is to them that he says through the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN:

"In this, certainly one of the greatest ordeals of my whole life, I feel that I have been strengthened and that success has attended the efforts of my physicians largely through the prayers of my people. I pray for them and thank them."

May Leave Hospital This Week.

During the illness His Grace the affairs of the diocese have been under the direction of the Very Rev. William G. Byrne, D. D., V. G., and the Rev. Thomas MacCormack, chancellor. The Archbishop, however, has been consulted on all matters of importance. Diocesan papers and his personal mail are read to him each day by his private secretary, the Rev. Francis X. Dolan, D. D.

According to the statements by his attending physicians the Archbishop will probably be sufficiently recovered to leave the hospital late this week. He will then spend a few weeks, possibly a month, recuperating before the second operation. The place of his rest has not yet been decided. It is probable that he will go to Rochester, N. Y., the home of his intimate friend, the [illegible] Bernard J. McQuaid, D. D.

By Dr. Hasket Derby.

Until within a few years the eyesight of Archbishop Williams was remarkably good for one of his advanced age. The first intimation of [illegible] was a need of glasses. It was soon discovered that the ocular weakness was caused by cataracts in both eyes. The [illegible] and the result is the present operation. The operation on the right eye was most satisfactory. We feel confident that the second operation will be fully as successful and that the archbishop's sight will be completely restored.

By Dr. John G. Blake.

The archbishop's vitality is, to say the least, wonderful. He is now more than eighty-three years old, but is remarkably well preserved. He is physically strong, eats well, sleeps well and is himself confident of recovery of eyesight.

Woods Hole, Feb. 11.—To-morrow the revenue cutter Mackinac will make an attempt to reach Nantucket Island. In order to get there she will have to break her way through fifty miles of ice, in peril every moment of crashing into an ice floe which will either grip her fast or rip her plates. In the path she will go there lie not dozens but hundreds of half submerged floating pieces of ice tremendous in area. No one knows the danger better than her captain, Wilde. He is proceeding to the relief of Nantucket by order of the United States government.

Aboard the Mackinac when she sails to-morrow at [illegible] in the morning will be seven passengers, her officers and crew, [illegible] of fresh beef and such other [illegible] absolutely necessary on the island and of which the residents have been deprived for more than a week since the blockade began, and also the [illegible] mail of ten days.

Foretaste of Peril.

The Mackinac had to-day a foretaste of the peril which she will have to fight on her way to the island. Before the order was received from the Navy Department for the Mackinac to make the attempt to reach Nantucket Captain Wilde went for a tour of [illegible] section of Quicks Hole and Vineyard Haven. In the terrific gale which [illegible] the 110-foot craft was tossed like a cork, hammered and battered by the great ice floes, several times turned on her beam ends and swept from stem to stern by huge waves laden with broken ice.

Should the gale which has been blowing since Friday night, and which at times went to sixty miles an hour, drop off tonight the peril of the Mackinac and its crew will be decreased accordingly. [illegible] the gale continue the fifty mile fight through the ice will be, if accomplished, one of the most daring sea exploits the New England coast has ever known.

Mails on the Mackinac.

[illegible] United States mails have already been placed on the Mackinac and by to-morrow morning the work of loading the carload of beef and other supplies will have been completed. The passengers will go aboard early. The going of two of these, Henry A. Harps, of Cuba, and his brother Richard Harps, of Cambridge, will please two sons beside a mother who, isolated on Nantucket, has been newly made a widow while the sons, powerless to reach her, remained in Woods Hole. One of these, Henry Harps, raced from Cuba in record time to reach the bedside of his dying father, to find the island ice-locked. To him, by the way, is given credit for the fact that the Mackinac is now to attempt the trip. He asked by wire that the Government act, and immediately the necessary orders were given.

Besides these two the passengers will be the Rev. H. H. Reiter of the Nantucket Episcopal Church, Rev. Milan C. Ayres of Newton Highlands, Electrician Leary of the Marconi Wireless Company, E. Stanley Swift [illegible] BOSTON AMERICAN. These passengers will be landed and on the return trip, if the Mackinac is able to [illegible] way through the great ice pack after she [illegible] passengers and mail from Nantucket will be brought back to Woods Hole.

How Attempt Is Planned.

"I shall make an easterly by southeast by southerly course in getting Quidnet," said Captain Wilde to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter to-night. "The dash must be made through broken seas to the north of Cross Rip lightship and thence southeasterly ten miles to the south of Great Point and the Rip shoals. We can then strike down towards Sankaty Light and Siasconset without fear of ice floes and effect a landing on the ocean side of the island. While the trip is a venturesome one I do not believe we shall have any difficulty in finding both passengers and mails. I shall also bring

The steamer Nantucket lies frozen in the ice field and other shipping is in the same plight.

Volunteers quickly responded to the call to aid in the landing of passengers and mails from the Mackinac to-morrow and sleds and sleighs will be in readiness to bear them across the island to this place. Great indignation was expressed to-night at the failure of the steamboat company to deliver the mails, and the protests are to culminate in a petition to the Government to see to it that the delivery will continue from now on until the end of the blockade at intervals of not more than three days.

IDENTIFIES HOCH AS HOLMES'S PARTNER.

Woman Creates Sensation by Declaring Positively That He Was the Right Hand Man of the Notorious Poisoner

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Feb. 11.—Mrs. Anna Boyd, [illegible] West Sixty-fifth street, today positively identified Johann Hoch as the right hand of H. H. Holmes, who died on the gallows ten years or more ago for the murders he committed in the famous Holmes castle on Sixty-Third street.

Mrs. Boyd, who lived just across the alley from the Holmes castle at the time of the murders and was familiar with many of its secrets, says she knew Hoch as "Jake." She declares that a relative of hers, a veterinary surgeon, who disappeared from Chicago two days before Holmes and "Jake" were the confederates of Holmes. She asserts that they used to insure valuable horses and then poison them for the insurance.

Saw Him Mix Poisons.

Most damaging testimony of all was the assertion made by Mrs. Boyd that she had seen Hoch, as Jake, mix poisons and [illegible] that no one could detect the presence of the poison after death.

Mrs. Boyd was induced to give her testimony only after great pressure upon the part of the police. She is terribly afraid of the vengeance of Hoch and of the relative who was associated with Holmes and Hoch in the old days.

[illegible] Mrs. Boyd, Inspector George Shippy, [illegible] Michael Loftus and Miss Evelyn Campbell of the Chicago American staff were present with Mrs. Boyd, who was heavily veiled.

No sooner had Mrs. Boyd seen Hoch than she said:

"That is the man. That is Jake."

Hoch advanced toward her and said:

"You know me, lady? Will you not shake hands?"

Throwing back her veil, she said:

"No, I do not shake hands with such as you."

Then Hoch grew angry.

Knew You at Holmes's Castle.

"At Holmes's castle," the woman replied. [illegible]

Miss Marie Nichols Scores an Artistic Triumph by Her Playing of a Difficult Bruch Serenade; Mr. Hess Conducts

One of the most thoroughly [illegible] performance, was given last night by the Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. It was marked by two specially interesting [illegible] Miss Marie Nichols, a handsome and [illegible] young violinist, as soloist, and the first conducting of the full Symphony Orchestra at a regular concert by Professor Willy Hess, the concert master.

He either was unconscious that the tribute was for him or refused to allow anything to detract from the personal triumph of Miss Nichols [illegible] parent in unconsciousness of the applause.

It has been the plan of the Symphony management for some time to have Professor Hess conduct the orchestra occasionally, and last night the experiment was tried for the first time with every indication of success. Professor Hess was on familiar ground in leading the Bruch Serenade, for he played it himself in Cologne in 1902.

The high standard already set in the first two numbers was fully sustained in the performance of Strauss's "Don Juan." The Don Juan whose emotions are portrayed in [illegible]

THEORIES ABOUT FOOD

Also a Few Facts on the Same Subject

[illegible] health foods and hygienic living [illegible] vegetarianism and many other [illegible]

Restaurants may be found in the large cities where no meat, pastry or coffee is served and the food crank is in his glory, and arguments and [illegible] to prove that meat was never intended for human stomachs and almost make us believe that our sturdy ancestors who lived four score years in robust health on roast beef, pork and mutton must have been grossly ignorant of the laws of health.

Our forefathers had other things to do than formulate theories about the food they ate. A warm welcome was extended to any kind from bacon to [illegible] appetite and common sense are excellent guides to follow in matters of diet, and a mixed diet of [illegible] is undoubtedly the best.

As compared with grains and vegetables, meat furnishes the most nutriment in a highly concentrated form and is digested and assimilated more quickly than vegetables and grains.

Dr. Julius Remmson on this subject says: Nervous persons, people run down in health and of low vitality should eat meat and plenty of it. If the digestion is too feeble at first it may be easily corrected by the regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal. Two of these excellent tablets taken after dinner will digest several thousand grains of meat, eggs or other animal food in three hours, and no matter how weak the stomach may be, no trouble will be experienced if a regular practice is made of using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they supply the pepsin and diastase necessary to perfect digestion, and every form of indigestion will be overcome by their use.

That large class of people who come under the head of nervous dyspeptics should eat plenty of meat and insure its proper digestion, by the daily use of a safe, harmless digestive medicine like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets composed of the natural digestive principles, pepsin, diastase, fruit acids and salts, which actually perform the work of digestion. Cheap cathartic medicines masquerading under the name of dyspepsia cures are useless for indigestion as they have absolutely no effect upon the actual digestion of food.

Dyspepsia in all its many forms is simply a failure of the stomach to digest food, and the sensible way to solve the riddle and cure the dyspepsia is to make daily use at meal time of a preparation like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which is endorsed by the medical profession and known to contain active digestive principles.

PROFESSOR PAINE'S "AZARA" ON NEW YORK STAGE.

Romance of the Crusades to Be Seen at the Metropolitan Opera House Next Season, With Fine Character Cast

With the love of Goutran, a heroic knight of the Crusades, for Azara, a beautiful Moorish maiden, as the central theme, Professor John Knowles Paine, the head of the music department at Harvard, has composed a grand opera in three acts, which will be produced next season at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, under the direction of Herr Conried.

"Azara" is the title of the opera, and while the com[illegible] all the poetry, romance and tragedy of the stirring period in the eleventh century, when the knights went forth to wrest the Holy Land from its Saracen conquerors, the work is thoroughly original and modern.

"Azara" is full of melodic beauty, striking harmony and polyphonic effects, rich in orchestration and especially strong in dramatic plot and action and scenic display. The opera is the result of years of labor on the part of Professor Paine. It was conceived from an old French romance, which had indelibly impressed itself upon his memory.

Portions of the opera have been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the ballet music of the third act, in which three Moorish dances are introduced, has been played by this [illegible] and the Chicago Orchestra under the leadership of the late Theodore Thomas, and on each occasion the music has been greeted by enthusiastic applause.

The scene of the opera is laid in Provence at the time of the early crusades, and the cast of characters comprises Rainulf, King of Provence; Goutran, hero of the opera, son of the King; Azara, heroine, ward of Aymar, a vassal of the King; Aymar, Count and vassal of Rainulf; [illegible] page; Malek, a Saracen chief; [illegible] herdess; Colas, shepherd, and a huntsman. There are the usual knights, men at arms, lords, ladies, pages, minstrels and dancing girls.

An interesting story is related of how "Azara" came to the attention of Herr Conried. This work was completed [illegible] ago, and had lain in Professor Paine's library till about a year ago, when a petition was sent to Herr Conried signed by such men [illegible] Hadley of Yale [illegible] Senator Lodge [illegible] W. DISSATISFACTION IS STILL FELT IN FALL RIVER.

Mill Workers Maintain That Employers Are Not Keeping Agreement, and a Feeling of Discontent Pervades the City

Fall River, Feb. 11.—There is great dissatisfaction among the mill workers because of what they insist is continued discrimination against certain of the men who went out at the time of the big strike and have not been reinstated. Coupled with this feeling among the workers comes a declaration from the weavers, who make up one third of the mill forces, that their troubles are such that they should be settled by action separate and distinct from that which will finally be taken in the matter.

Among all the strikers there is some feeling [illegible]

Secretary [illegible] Weavers' [illegible]

"The weavers are nearly 10,000 in number and a good part of the older ones, family heads and family representatives, are organized into the Weavers' Progressive Association. We have waited and worked patiently following the strike settlement to ascertain if the new conditions could be met, to see if with the changes our men and women could run extra machinery for lower prices per loom and still earn a living."

Secretary Joseph G. Jackson of the Slashers' Union said:

"I keep hearing rumors that numbers of my men will be called in to work next week. None has been placed since last Monday. I hope that the rumor of setting many of them to work in the coming week is true."

Secretary James Tansey of the Carders' Union said that he was satisfied that some of his men had been discriminated against.

CASINO THEATRE FIRE CAUSES PANIC.

Members of the Lillian Russell Lady Teazle Company Have Narrow Escape from Well-Known New York Playhouse

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, Feb. 11.—Many of the members of Lillian Russell's "Lady Teazle" company who were in their dressing [illegible] those of a new "Floradora" company which [illegible] thrilling escape from the Casino Theatre to-day after the discovery of a fire that came near destroying the building.

The Casino is at Thirty-ninth street and Broadway and is one of the best known playhouses in the city. Such rapid headway did the flames make that it was necessary to send in three alarms. Broadway was blockaded and a great crowd gathered and watched the firemen fight to save the theatre.

The frightened girls of the two companies, many of them in the costumes of their parts, dashed into the street in terror. Chief Croker soon reached the scene and took personal charge of the fire. He declared that so far as he could tell everybody had escaped from the building and that no one had been injured.

Discovered in Gallery.

Several of the girls were overcome by [illegible] it were soon revived when taken [illegible] the open air.

Among those on the stage when the fire was discovered was Miss Adele Ritchie. She and the other members of a new company who were rehearsing ran from the stage and reached the street through the side entrance.

The fire was discovered in the gallery of the structure. It is thought that it originated there, but the cause of it is a mystery. At 1 o'clock Chief Croker said that the building would probably not be destroyed. Although the flames were still dashing from the roof, the firemen had gained control of them.

The work of the fire fighters was seriously impeded by the difficulty in obtaining a sufficient water supply. Chief Croker ordered a water tower set up on the Broadway side, but was unable to get a stream through it. There was great delay also on the Thirty-ninth street side, owing to the fact that the water pipes were frozen.

Damage About $35,000.

Fortunately the Saturday matinee crowd had not begun to arrive, and there was none of the terrible panic which would have resulted in such a blaze had it occurred a few hours later.

Lillian Russell, the star in "Lady Teazle," had just finished luncheon in her home at No. 161 West Fifty-seventh street when the telephone rang and a voice at the other end told her of the fire.

"Good gracious," she said to her maid. "The Casino's on fire. I must go right down there."

Calling a cab Miss Russell was driven to the scene.

The damage to the theatre, according to an estimate made by Chief Croker, amounts to about $35,000. The asbestos curtain was lowered as soon as the fire was discovered, and the flames were prevented from spreading through the proscenium arch to the [illegible] dressing rooms.

Jacob Wolff, proprietor of the cafe in the building, estimates his loss in paintings and curios at $30,000.

The fire burned [illegible] the upper floors and balconies on the Broadway side, which are nearly destroyed. The lower part of the theatre, Chief Croker says, is in fair shape.

WIFE OF EDWARD S. BRADFORD DIES

MRS. ROGERS, IN DEATH CELL, IS HAYPY.

Hoping for New Trial, She Prays, Writes and Reads, and Continually Speaks of Those Who Saved Her Life

Windsor, Vt., Feb. 11.—Mary Rogers, confident in the expectation that the efforts of her lawyers and friends to secure her a new trial will be crowned with success [illegible] hospital ward of the State prison, and the [illegible]

Superintendent Oakes has decided not to transfer the woman back to the cell which she occupied before the death cell. Precedent in Vermont demands that a condemned murderess shall spend the last ninety days of her life in the death cell. Mrs. Rogers occupied it for that length of time previous to Feb. 2, the date set for her hanging.

It was thought, when Governor Bell's reprieve was received, that within a day or two the prisoner would be taken from the hospital ward and returned to the ordinary cell. Later it seemed unnecessary to do this.

Sleeps Well in Death Cell.

The reprieve being for only four months, less than a month would pass before it would be necessary to take the woman back. When she was first placed in the death cell she did not sleep at all for two nights, and for a long time her slumbers were very fitful. She has latterly got to sleeping quite well. Superintendent Oakes and Warden Harpin, acting upon the advice of Prison Chaplain Fuller and Matron Durkee, believed that if Mrs. Rogers was taken from the hospital ward and placed in another cell, she might go through the same harrowing experience when returned, whereas if left there continuously her nerves will suffer less of a shock. It seemed humane not to change her.

The prisoner is occupying her mind these days much the same as in the weeks before her reprieve. She prays, writes and reads. She speaks much to Mrs. Durkee of the new trial she believes she will receive. She knows her friends are working hard for it, and often speaks of her gratitude to those who saved her life.

"If it wasn't for them I would be dead now," she says. "I can never let them know how much I thank them."

Mrs. Rogers speaks often of her thanks to Sheriff Peck and his deputies for their share in securing her reprieve. She wishes she could see the sheriff to thank him again.

Sheriff Peck Stays Away.

He has not visited her since he called to read the death warrant, for the same reason that he had not called to see her until the day preceding the date of execution—he does not wish to conceive any friendship for the woman whom it will be his duty to execute on June 2 if the Supreme Court fails to grant the petition for a new trial.

The lawyers who are to petition the court, at its May term, for a new trial, are working slowly on the case. They have nearly three months to spare no pains to make their case a strong one. They express confidence that they will secure the new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence that relatives of Mary Rogers were insane, and that Leon Perham has confessed he swore falsely at the first trial.

TRUST WORRIED BY PEOPLE'S GAS FIGHT.

Exposure of Weakness of the Companies' Capitalization Case Greatly Distresses Opponents of Demand for Reform [illegible] not be allowed to put through a deal to inflate its capital has had some uncomfortable moments during the past week.

The Trust managers and attorneys are plainly seriously worried by the absolute proof of the case against them, brought by the BOSTON AMERICAN on behalf of 70,890 of its readers, who signed its great petition for 80-cent gas. They have affected an attitude of fairness and a desire to do the right thing by the people of Boston, an attitude that has been many times unmasked by Attorney Auerbach, counsel for the people, and by Corporation Counsel Babson, acting for Mayor Collins.

Three indications of the desperation of the Gas Trust have been given during the past week.

Pocketed the Evidence.

Harvey S. Chase, an expert accountant, had been secured to go over the books of the gas companies for both sides, Counsel Snow for the companies saying he welcomed the expert's investigation. When Mr. Chase's report was received and it was about to be submitted as evidence, Mr. Snow discovered that in it were figures he and the Gas Trust did not care to have made public. He coolly pocketed the paper and protested that he did not care to have the figures put in evidence.

The people's attorneys of course insisted [illegible] dence upon the Gas Trust as it would have been had it proved the Trust's case, and demanded it be accepted as evidence.

Chairman Barker announced that the board would consider the matter.

The evidence has not yet been put in.

In a newspaper appeared a long article, purporting to be an unbiased statement of gas conditions in Boston, very cleverly written. One knowing nothing of [illegible] It were the exact phrases, word for word, used in recent conversations and before the commission hearings by representatives [illegible] an argument for the Trust. Commissioner Schaff gave the attorneys for the gas [illegible] when he characterized the article, in the course of a hearing, as "inspired by one under whose direction witness does his [illegible]"

Demanded Trust Books.

[illegible] gan. He has asked that all evidence bearing on the questions under consideration be received, whoever might be hit. He has demanded that the books of the [illegible] inde has been, "Let us have a real investigation of this matter."

With but one exception his colleagues have every time ruled against him and with the Trust. That exception was when the Trust wanted the public barred from participation in the capitalization hearing [illegible] Mr. George, who has declared that "The law [illegible] that we shall settle this thing not [illegible] and the Commission unanimously recognized that the public had rights in a public hearing.

General Schaff has asked many questions in an attempt to get at the facts. It was not until Friday, however, that he showed in words his dissatisfaction with the way the hearings have been conducted.

Auditor Grant of the gas companies was on the stand, putting in carefully prepared figures to back up the appraisal of Expert Humphreys as to the "fair value" of the Boston gas properties. A paper had been offered in evidence dated 1893, and stating the decision of three judges as to the worth of mains of the Bay State company. Chairman Barker had rejected it, as he rejected the books of the company, and as he has to date rejected the Chase report which Mr. Snow wished kept private because it was not in his favor.

Against All Precedent.

"This evidence ought to go in," said General Schaff. "Evidence has been accepted that is illegal. Even suppose this is improper according to legal procedure. We have not been conducting this hearing according to legal procedure. What I want is information, and I do not care where it comes from."

It will be remembered that from the first General Schaff has contended that the Trust as petitioner should state what it desired and then endeavor to prove its case. He has objected to accepting copies from the books of the companies, when the books themselves are accessible. He has objected to the form of procedure, which he has said is against all precedent, and he has been overruled by Messrs. Barker and George in each instance.

"I am a bit embarrassed," he said Friday, "by the attitude of parties here, and hardly know just where to go to get facts which seem to me absolutely essential to a fair decision in this case."

The Gas Trust, by Expert Humphreys and Auditor Gould, has sought to prove that a fair value of the mains in the street which make up one half the tremendous values Mr. Humphreys gave to the Gas Trust property is what it would cost to purchase new mains in place of them all, without regard to the necessity for them and to lay them, allowing two and one half per cent. for interest, ten per cent. or more for contingencies, and fifteen per cent. for contractors' profits, and to repave or reconcrete the streets above them.

"Quick Assets" of the Companies.

"It is idle, I think, to go on and examine experts as to the value of these mains," said General Schaff, after a particularly strong exhibition of audacity on the part of the trust. "I understand that a fair value of these mains is the sum they cost the companies, not the sum they would be duplicated for."

Attorney Snow showed some perturbation over this. He continued, however, to put in his evidence. Neither Chairman Barker nor Commissioner George showed any indication of sympathy with General Schaff in his attitude.

An interesting bit of figuring was proved by General Schaff when Auditor Grant gave a list of the "quick assets" of the companies, which the trust includes, of course, in its appraisal of property to be capitalized. Amidst the other figures was $125,000 which sharp examination developed represented money deposited by gas consumers when taking out meters. The company, in other words, desires to capitalize the meters and also the money deposited for them, which is not its property, but belongs to the consumers and is held as a guarantee against the outstanding meters.

If the contention of General Schaff as to the valuation of mains should be allowed, it would take millions off the value the Gas Trust wants for its new capitalization.

It is likely that the hearings on recapitalization will last not more than another week. Then the public will anxious[illegible] [illegible] await the decision of the Commission which it is hardly possible will be [illegible] after the Legislature [illegible] opportunity to act upon the [illegible] the General Court prevent the grab the Gas Trust is trying to engineer.

HOSPITAL ROMANCE MADE A NURSE RICH DOCTOR'S BRIDE

New Bedford Couple Now on Honeymoon Trip to Young Wife's Childhood Home in Norway.

New Bedford, Feb. 11.—Miss Sigrid Moller, now Mrs. Elliott F. Stetson, wife of one of the wealthiest men in this city, is returning from Norway, the home of her childhood, on her honeymoon trip.

When Mrs. Stetson returns to New Bedford it will be to find that her new home will look much like the mansion of one of Norway's lords such as she had often admired as a girl. The mansion is Dr. Stetson's gift to his bride.

Met First In Hospital.

These two, the wealthy young physician and Miss Sigrid Moller, the nurse, met in a New York Hospital. He was still pursuing his course of study and she was receiving her final instructions in the art of caring for the sick. They fell in love, the nurse imagining all the time that she had given her heart to a poor young physician. It was not until she came to New Bedford to be married that she discovered that he had wealth and social position.

For a time it was feared that the ceremony would not take place. Miss Moller felt [illegible] Unlike her future husband's [illegible] was rapid and the marriage took place.

House Like Norway.

The house which they will occupy is the wonder of old New Bedford. Dr. Stetson has ordered that no expense be spared to carry out his desires.

It will be a reminder of old Norway all through, even to the library, where the works of the noted authors of the country are bound in the best coverings.

CAMBRIDGE STILL FIGHTING FOR CUT IN PRICE OF GAS

Though Representative Edward J. Sennott was unsuccessful in his attempt to induce the Massachusetts House of Representatives to accept a substitute bill establishing one dollar gas in Cambridge, the fight for cheaper gas in that city will be waged without a letup by the City Council.

Three different attempts have been made to compel the Cambridge Gaslight Company to reduce the present price, which is $1.20 with a rebate of twenty cents on bills paid before the fifteenth of the month. The first attempt was made several weeks ago by Alderman John W. Coveney, who introduced an order which passed both branches of the city government and by which Mayor Daly was instructed to consult with the officials of the corporation in an endeavor to lower the price, the exact figures at which gas was to be sold not being named. Last Tuesday night when the City Council met the report of the gas company was read and referred to the Committee on Wires and Lamps.

Could Make No Reduction.

In this report, which dealt with the local gas situation at great length, the company said that no reduction in the present price could be made without decreasing the dividends considerably, and impairing the value of the plant. The company claimed to have made a half a dozen voluntary reductions in the past fifteen years, and the report stated that the present price was the lowest at which gas could be produced by the corporation.

Independent of this action by Alderman Coveney two other propositions were tried looking toward a reduction in the price of gas. One was the original bill introduced by Representative Sennott, which called for the establishment of a fixed price of 80 cents per thousand feet. This bill was adversely reported by the committee on public lighting, and then, as a further attempt at reducing the price, Mr. Sennott asked the House to accept a substitute bill, fixing the price of gas at a dollar.

House Defeated Substitute.

After a spirited debate the substitute was refused by the House, and, apparently, the question is closed as far as projected legislation is concerned.

Though both these propositions have been unsuccessful there is another chance that the people of Cambridge may yet receive a reduction. A week after Alderman Coveney's order was adopted Councilman David J. Nelligan of North Cambridge introduced an order, which passed both branches, calling upon the city of Cambridge to take its case direct to the Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners, and prove by facts and figures that the gas company is able to sell gas more cheaply than at the present price.

"My order," said Councilman Nelligan, "seems to me to be the only way to seek a reduction in price. I have been delving into the figures in relation to the cost of producing gas and I am certain from my own study of the case that the Cambridge gaslight company can well afford to reduce the price considerably.

"My plan is for a hearing before the Board of Gas and Electric Commissioners, have an expert to represent the people of this city, and produce figures to prove that we are not seeking anything out of reason in asking a reduction."

NEWTON MAN IS HURLED FROM AUTO CAR.

Joseph W. Crowell at Point of Death From Collision Between His Auto and Car on Watertown Electric Line

Since noon yesterday Joseph W. Crowell, the wealthy young Newton man who was thrown from his automobile in a sudden collision with a Stowe street electric car in Newton Highlands, has lain unconscious in the Newton Hospital.

During all that time his mother, Mrs. Eliza W. Crowell, with whom he lived at No. 11 Copley street, has remained at his bedside awaiting his return to consciousness.

The young man received a severe wound on the forehead, a badly injured eye and is said to have been injured internally. It is [illegible] to say whether or not he will recover.

He was proceeding up Walnut street, Newton, at a fair rate of speed, following the car track, as the snow was piled on either side.

Coming in the opposite direction was a Newton street car. As Crowell neared the car he turned out quickly, but as the snow was piled at a considerable height to the track [illegible] down on the tracks again. The motorman [illegible] it was too late.

Crowell was thrown with great force from his car, his head striking a stanchion of the vestibule of the electric car. The front part of his machine was entirely demolished.

He was picked up and taken immediately to Greene's drug store, near by. Dr. Withery, who happened to be near the spot, found it necessary to administer nitroglycerine to keep him alive until the ambulance arrived. He was taken to the Newton Hospital, where he was at once placed on the operating table.

Young Crowell was very prominent while at Technology and has many friends. He was captain of the 'Varsity track team and had been looking forward to attending the B. A. A. meet last night.

DIES SUDDENLY IN A DENTIST'S CHAIR.

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—Thomas Howard died last night while being placed under the influence of chloroform in a dentist's chair. He was to have a tooth extracted in the office of the Hale Dental Company.

The man had been suffering from a severe toothache for several days, and Dr. Victor Orella, the dentist, noticed that the jaw was considerably contracted. He says that he feared lockjaw and sent for Dr. H. E. Vreeland of 631 Golden Gate avenue to administer the chloroform. Vreeland says that he placed only four drops of the drug on the mask covering the man's face when he noticed that the man had died.

The matter was reported to the coroner and a detective was sent to investigate the matter by Deputy Coroner Meehan. The police thought that death was accidental and they did nothing further in the case.

Meehan granted Howard's relatives permission to secure the services of an undertaker and the corpse was removed to his parlors.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much-improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

SNELL PREFERS DEATH TO HINT OF INSANITY.

Convicted Murderer of Tillinghast Kirby Very Indignant at the Suggestion That He May Be Possibly of Unsound Mind

ABHORS ALIENISTS MORE THAN THE CHAIR

He Spends Most of His Time in Jail Writing the Story of His Life, Which, It Is Said, Will Be of Absorbing Interest

New Bedford, Feb. 11.—Angles Snell, bent and gray, convicted of the murder of his old friend, Tillinghast Kirby, would rather go to death in the electric chair than save his life through a plea of insanity.

Suffering solitary confinement as he awaits an examination by alienists, the old man persists that he did not murder Kirby. But with even greater vehemence he proudly refuses to have his crime mitigated through the admission that he is tainted with mental disease.

"I am not insane," Angles Snell declared to-day, "and while I never killed my good old friend, Tillinghast Kirby, on that day off Gooseberry Neck one year ago last August, I still would rather go to the electric chair and die like a man than have a ten sets or any other persons report that I am insane. I am not insane, and that is all there is to the matter."

In Solitary Confinement.

Snell is now incarcerated, awaiting his appeal to the Supreme Court, which will be made shortly by his attorneys, Messrs. Dubuque and Doran, on exceptions taken at his trial last year in this city. The report of the alienists upon his mental condition will be made shortly by Drs. Jelly and Stoddard of Boston, to his attorneys, as ordered by the courts.

Since his trial Snell has been placed in solitary confinement, but he is allowed to wear civilian clothes and also has many little favors shown him by Superintendent J. Howard Taylor of the Bristol County Jail that could not be allowed him if under sentence of death.

Snell spends most of his time in writing the story of his life that is to be published after his death, should he be so sentenced. The convicted slayer of Tillinghast Kirby is a slow but careful writer and it is understood that his story of his life will be one of absorbing interest to students of criminology.

Man of Excessive Vanity.

"Angles Snell is what I should call a type of the perfect criminal," said one of the officials of Bristol County to a representative of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN to-day. This man knows Snell better than any other person, and has made a close study of his characteristics. He continued:

"I do not doubt that Snell resents an examination into his sanity because he is a man of excessive vanity and proud of his strength and cunning.

"He reminds me more of Wolf Larsen, captain of the hell-ship in Jack London's 'Sea Wolf' than any criminal I have ever known. Snell lacks Larsen's wonderful strength, but his brutality and terrible anger are of the same pattern as London's character in the novel."

MILLIONS SUFFER EVERY WINTER FROM GRIP. THE IDEAL REMEDY PRAISED BY ALL IS PE-RU-NA

The Grip Claims 100,000 Victims Each Year. Every Home Should be Provided With Pe-ru-na to Protect Its Members.

GRIP is acknowledged by all physicians to be the most difficult of diseases to treat.

Nearly every physician has a different treatment. There has been no common agreement as to the best way of handling this scourge of the civilized world.

In 1850 Dr. Hartman introduced Peruna as a catarrh remedy, and as soon as la grippe came to be recognized as epidemic catarrh, Peruna gradually came to be used as a la grippe remedy.

From that time the use of Peruna as a la grippe remedy has steadily grown. Now it is the recognized standard remedy of the world for la grippe.

Not only is it prompt and efficient in its action in the acute stages of la grippe, but, for the after-effects of la grippe, no better remedy can be found.

As a rule, la grippe leaves its victims in a very bad state of health. The nervous system is disturbed, and especially the digestive and nutritive organs are deranged.

This condition has produced a host of chronic invalids in all sections of the country.

In no other class of cases has Peruna been able to accomplish more remarkable cures than in these cases.

Peruna at once removes the catarrhal condition of the mucous membranes, invigorates the digestive organs and gives tone to the nervous system.

This makes Peruna an ideal remedy for the after-effects of la grippe and releases an untold multitude from the grasp of this inexorable enemy to the human family.

Mrs. Jane Gift, Hebbardsville, Ohio, writes:

"Six years ago I had la grippe very bad. The doctor came to see me every day, but I gradually grew worse. I told my husband I must get relief.

"One day I [illegible] [illegible] testimonial of a woman who had been cured of la grippe by Peruna.

"I told my husband I wanted to try [illegible]. He [illegible] and got [illegible]

"I could see [illegible] short time and was soon able to do my work. I continued using it until I was entirely cured."

La Grippe Causes Serious Derangement.

Mr. John Miller, [illegible] Ohio, [illegible]

"I was taken sick [illegible] with la grippe, which [illegible] my being troubled with gall stones.

"I was examined by a physician who said I had gall stones, but could not cure me.

La Grippe and Catarrh Combined.

Mr. Samuel M. York, Union Grove, Ala., [illegible]

"I was taken with la grippe and catarrhal deafness. I wrote you for [illegible] and followed your directions.

"After taking two bottles of Peruna, I found myself well [illegible] grippe and my hearing was fully restored."

U. S. Marshal of Alabama Speaks Highly of Pe-ru-na.

Hon. Dan. Cooper, U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of Alabama, writes:

"Your remedy for catarrh and la grippe, Peruna, has done me so much good that I cannot speak too highly [illegible]"

La Grippe Leaves Catarrh of the Throat.

Miss Caroline Webber, 336 Troop Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"After having the grip, I was much [illegible]

"I had a cough which seemed almost impossible to get rid of. I took Peruna with excellent results."

Recommends Pe-ru-na for La Grippe and Catarrh.

Hon. J. P. McGrew, Supt. U. S. Capitol Police Force, Washington, D. C., writes:

"Having suffered from the grip I was advised by a friend to use your Peruna.

"I also took it for my catarrh, and I can cheerfully recommend your remedy to any one suffering from the grip and catarrh."

Cured by Less Than Two Bottles of Pe-ru-na.

Mr. Lyman B. Smith, 165 Montcalm Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes:

"Two years ago I had a serious attack of la grippe and was confined to my bed. Less than two bottles of Peruna cured.

"Since that time I have taken it a dozen times, and my friends have taken it, and it has helped them all."

Convinced of Pe-ru-na's Merit.

Mrs. M. Riley, 810 2nd St., S. E., Washington, D. C., [illegible]

"I have used your Peruna for catarrh and the grip [illegible] I feel like a new woman.

Suffered With La Grippe Seven Winters.

Mr. Frank Bauer, Minneiska, Minn., writes:

"For seven Winters I had suffered with la grippe, and by each attack was [illegible]

"Last Winter I was [illegible] attacked with la grippe [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Peruna [illegible] times a day [illegible]

"I [illegible] I had Peruna [illegible] [illegible]

Pe-ru-na Builds Health and Strength.

Mrs. Nancy Power, [illegible] Yamhill St., Portland, Ore., Vice President South Portland [illegible], writes:

"When I had recovered from a severe attack of la grippe I found that my strength did not return [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Peruna to build up my health and strength.

"I am pleased to state that it has made me [illegible] much better than I have [illegible] years."

Saved From the After-Effects of La Grippe.

Miss Nellie J. Brady, Hotel Irvington, Los Angeles, Cal., an enterprising solicitor and member of the Fraternal Union of America, writes:

"I had the misfortune, in common with many other people, to contract la grippe last winter, and after trying [illegible] remedies was induced to try Peruna, which I did, much to my satisfaction and relief.

"I am pleased to say that the remedy not only [illegible] a continuance of the medicine fortunately saved me from the irritating and often fatal after-effects of the disease."

Pe-ru-na Cures La Grippe and Cough.

Mrs. Mary Frost, Monrovia, Kas., writes:

"I had la grippe last winter, with a severe cough which I could not seem to get rid of.

"I took Peruna. In a short time it had rid the system of all traces of la grippe and made me perfectly well and strong.

"I also gave it to my daughter, who had la grippe and almost coughed herself to death, and it had the same beneficial results in her case."

Cured by Three Bottles of Pe-ru-na.

Mr. Joakim Zimmerman, Collinsville, Ill., writes:

"I have taken three bottles of Peruna and am well again. I also had la grippe when I began taking it.

"Whenever I feel badly again, I shall take Peruna."

Keeps Pe-ru-na in the House.

Mr. M. E. Morrow, Supt. of State Road [illegible], writes:

"I had a severe attack of la grippe last winter and could find nothing which would give me my appetite or strength or help my system in any way, until I got a bottle of Peruna.

"In three days [illegible] I became [illegible] improved, and after using the second bottle I was able to attend to [illegible] [illegible] We keep Peruna [illegible]

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

OBSTINATE CASES

Of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful periods, prolapsus, or falling of womb, attended by weak back, bearing-down sensations, ulceration of womb, pain and tenderness of ovaries, are almost always cured by a fairly persistent use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. If in any case it should, in due time, not seem quite adequate to meet every phase of some complicated case, Dr. Pierce always stands ready to offer valuable suggestions based upon years of varied experience which often proves of inestimable value. This he does entirely free of charge to those using his medicines. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—I once thought I should never enjoy good health again. What I suffered with womb disease words cannot express. Had distressing bearing-down pains, painful monthly sickness, backache, constipation, also cold hands and feet at all times. Was all run-down, and there was nothing left of me but a shadow. After I had taken eight bottles Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, two of his "Compound Extract of Smart-Weed," also some of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, I was entirely cured. I always keep the remedies on hand now, and recommend them to all my friends. Yours truly,

MRS. JOHN BOWERS.

998 4th Street, Rensselaer, Albany, N. Y.

There is no opium, cocaine or other narcotic in "Favorite Prescription." Neither does it contain alcohol, whisky or other intoxicant.

It often happens that childlessness is due to conditions which may be corrected. Many women have found that the vitality and vigor imparted by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to the womanly organs, has been the one thing needful to fulfill the joy of motherhood. This famous medicine is not a cure-all, but a specialist's prescription, having as a single aim the cure of diseases peculiar to women.

Reliable dealers recommend "Favorite Prescription." With tricky ones, something else that pays them better will probably be urged upon you as "just as good." Perhaps it is for them; but it can't be for you. Some saving may be made by purchasing our medicines in half-dozen quantities.

If you are convinced that the "Favorite Prescription" is the medicine you need, do not be cajoled into accepting something else. The attempt to induce you to do so is an insult to your intelligence. Turn your back on the one who offers the affront.

DR. PIERCE'S PLEASANT PELLETS

Cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation of the bowels, loss of appetite, coated tongue, sour stomach, windy belchings, "heart-burn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

Persons subject to any of these troubles should never be without a vial of the "Pleasant Pellets" at hand. They are always adopted as a household remedy after the first trial. Put up in glass vials, tightly corked, therefore always fresh and reliable.

One little "Pellet" is a laxative, two are cathartic. They regulate, invigorate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels. As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day. To relieve the distress arising from over-eating, nothing equals one of these little "Pellets." They're tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules, scarcely larger than mustard seeds.

APPROVAL HAILS PROPOSAL TO TAKE DANIEL WEBSTER FARM OVER AS PUBLIC RESERVATION

RELICS OF FAMOUS STATESMAN ARE PRESERVED.

Probably no measure introduced in the Legislature this session, or in many years, has met with such general approval [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] authorizing the purchase of the Daniel Webster estate in Marshfield. The act proposes to turn the estate into a State reservation as a monument to the memory of the distinguished American patriot, jurist, statesman, orator and scholar.

The bill is the outcome of a petition presented to the Legislature by C. Porter Wright, who for many years was Daniel Webster's head farmer.

Mr. Wright is now ninety years old, and lives at No. 44 Spencer street, Dorchester. He is the only person living who was at Mr. Webster's bedside when he died.

House Burned Down.

The house in which Daniel Webster died was burned down in 1880 and replaced by the present handsome country residence in which Walton Hall, who owns the estate, resides with his family. If the estate is turned into a public park, the house will probably be used as a Webster museum.

Most of the furniture used by the Webster family is still intact, including the massive easy arm chair. The chair is a solid piece of heavily carved mahogany upholstered in leather with a foot rest and with the small desk attached to a swivel on the right arm.

In a cupboard, carefully preserved by Mrs. Hall, their owner, are two relics of Webster that tell of the ponderous size of the man. They are a walking stick, a plain [illegible] stick, to be wielded only by one six feet or more tall, and a large pair of heavy old-fashioned white cotton outing trousers, with ample girth and long legs that prove also that Webster was not of meagre stature.

Near the northern boundary of the estate is the cemetery containing the Webster plot, in which are buried all the members of Daniel Webster's family. A neat but unpretentious marble slab is erected in memory of each, and in the centre a plain block of marble bearing the words "Daniel Webster" marks the location of the vault in which lie their remains.

Daniel Webster,

Born January 18, 1782.
Died October 24, 1852.

Lord I believe, help Thou my unbelief.

> Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the vastness of the universe, in comparison with the apparent insignificance of the globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the belief which is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a Divine Reality. The Sermon on the Mount cannot be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it.
> DANIEL WEBSTER.

Among the large number who have expressed approval of the proposed transformation of the Webster place into a public park are the Dartmouth Alumni Association, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Senator Winthrop Murray Crane, former Governor JJohn L. Bates, former Governor John D. Long, Major Higginson, Hon. Richard Olney, Chief Justice J. A. Aiken, Judge Richardson, Judge Hardy, Judge Dewey, Congressman McCall, Congressman Tirrell, Congressman Powers, Congressman Lawrence, former Governor G. S. ATHLETE TO TAKE EXAMINATION IN CALORIMETER.

Wesleyan Football Captain Is Subject of an Experiment to Measure Energy Expended in the College Examination

Middletown, Conn., Feb. 11.—Instead of taking his examination in French in the class room on Monday, John B. Eyster, of York, Pa., captain of the Wesleyan football team and one of the finest athletes in college, will take it in the famous Atwater calorimeter, while Professor Benedict, of the chemistry department, will be stationed on the outside and take the required data to determine the amount of energy an athlete expends in taking an ordinary three-hour college examination.

The calorimeter is a large box fitted inside with delicate apparatus for measuring the energy and other matters given off by the body. An experiment of the nature of the one being performed on Captain Eyster has never been attempted before.

"I thought I would write you what Pyramid Pile Cure has done for me. I had a most aggravated case of bleeding piles; indeed I dreaded when I had to go to the [illegible]. One fifty-cent box [illegible] I feel like a new man. I have recommended it to others as [illegible] the most wonderful remedy [illegible] known. [illegible] a blessing to suffering humanity. You are at liberty to use this for all it is worth and I hope it may do good. Rev. W. P. Carr, [illegible] No. Lottrock St. Danville, Va.

[illegible] that the professional man who [illegible] sedentary lives are especially [illegible] to piles, in various forms, and are continually on the lookout for a remedy which will give relief, with little or no idea of obtaining a cure.

Recognizing this fact, Rev. Mr. Carr consents to the use of his name in order that other sufferers may know there is a cure called Pyramid Pile Cure, which is sold by druggists everywhere for the low price of fifty cents a package, and which will bring about for every one afflicted with piles the same beneficial results as in his own case. Be careful to accept no substitutes and remember that there is no remedy just as good.

A little book describing the cause and cure of piles is published by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., and will be sent free for the asking. All sufferers are advised to write for it, as it contains valuable information on the subject of piles.

The Difference

Between the usual type of encyclopedia and the New Werner 20th Century ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA is, briefly, that the latter's articles give all that is to be said upon their subjects, and by the world's foremost specialists; while other cyclopedias merely give the gist of the matter for hasty reference.

Compare this king of reference works with the best of the others, and you will see the difference. Few of them run over fifteen volumes, or contain more than 10,000 pages. This encyclopedia contains totalling 25,000 double-column pages, embellished with 12,000 maps, diagrams and illustrations. If its pages were reprinted in volumes the size of the ordinary novel it would require 500 such books to contain it!

Every one of the articles, maps and illustrations represents the highest thought, skill and authority. More than 3,000 eminent contributors have covered every subject in science, art, philosophy, history, biography, trade industry and professional knowledge.

Its Value in the Home is the greatest of all because its articles give enough material in themselves for study and home work, instead of referring the reader elsewhere. So complete are they that many of them have been reprinted as text books for use in schools.

Is there any special branch of study in which you wish to ground yourself these winter evenings? Are you interested in Astronomy, or Electricity, or Wood-working? Do you want to learn about Russia, China, or Japan?

The Final Marvel

is that this greatest of Encyclopedias is also the cheapest. The latest edition revised up to 1905, is being supplied for a short time on remarkable terms.

Our extensive advertising and distributing facilities have given us control of the entire edition, which is being sent direct from the factory to customers at 50 per cent. discount, and on terms so easy that it is within reach of every man and woman who can spare TEN CENTS A DAY! And the books are delivered right in your home on payment of the FIRST DOLLAR!

SEND THE INQUIRY COUPON TO-DAY!

Our special offer at this per cent. discount is limited. You must be prompt to be sure of a set of the New Werner Twentieth Century Edition before the inevitable advance in price. By our easy payment plan you can secure a set on the payment of one dollar, and the remainder can be paid at the rate of ten cents a day for a short time. Cut out the Inquiry Coupon and mail it to us NOW—while you are looking at it—and let us tell you more about this remarkable book bargain. SHOBER'S REMARKABLE RATE SPEECH LAYS BARE DEMOCRACY'S MISTAKE IN PREFERRING WALL STREET TO HEARST POLICIES

CHARACTERISTIC ATTITUDES OF CONGRESSMAN SHOBER, TALKING ON RATE BILLS

Failure to Accept the Hearst Bill Most Grievous of Errors

Washington, Feb. 11.—The speech of Representative Francis E. Shober, of New York, delivered on the floor of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, attracted wide attention. Delivered during the debate on the pending bills relating to the regulation of railroad freight rates, Mr. Shober denounced the Davey bill, foisted upon the Democratic minority by "Leader" John Sharp Williams, and called attention to the reactionary influence that dictated such an inadequate measure.

Mr. Shober showed that the influence moving John Sharp Williams in putting forward an incompetent railroad freight rate bill is the same influence—the Belmont-Wall street influence—that prostituted the Democratic party last year, before and during the St. Louis convention and the national campaign.

Mr. Shober declared that the will of the people had been subverted by the trust efforts and money. He said that William Randolph Hearst was the people's choice, but that the Democrats who carried the States of New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana had been swindled out of the fruits of their victory.

He demonstrated by the election figures how more than a million Democrats refused to vote at all, and how more than a million Democrats voted for Democratic candidates for Governor, but, refusing to vote the national ticket, cast their ballots for Roosevelt.

Mr. Shober's conclusion was that if the people had not been thwarted in their choice of candidate, the Democracy would have won nationally at the last election.

Requests for copies of Mr. Shober's speech have been so numerous that it is herewith printed in full.

"Great Opportunity Lost," Says Shober.

Mr. Shober said

Mr. Chairman—It is a matter of regret to discover that the minority is in an embarrassing position on this great question. Through an error of judgment, or for some other reason not quite clear, a great opportunity has been lost on this side of the chamber—the opportunity of putting the Democratic party in line with its declarations of several national conventions past on so great a subject as this, a subject that touches the hearths and homes of every man, woman and child in this great country.

"The fact that the opportunity has been lost and this grievous mistake has been made is the more regrettable when we remember, as those on this side of the chamber have good reason to remember, that a similar mistake and a similar loss of opportunity occurred when the convention met in St. Louis eight months ago. The party leaders then and the leaders now have failed to heed the demands of the common people, have ignored their preferences and set aside their wishes.

Opposed to Special Privileges.

"Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on this side of the chamber will remember that a year ago it was predicted we had for 1904 a Democratic year. It was predicted that never before in the history of Democracy was the time more ripe and the opportunity more propitious for Democratic success at the polls than we then had. For eight years our party had fought in the people's cause more strenuously than it had in half a century prior to that time. We were opposed to special privileges, to illegal combinations of capital, to the growing and grasping power of the trusts. We had declared for larger and greater measures calculated to relieve the people from the burdens which the trusts were daily imposing on them. On this very subject of governmental control of the railroad interests we had declared emphatically time and time again. The people knew this, and they looked to the Democratic party, as they had a right to look, to give them this relief. They went further, and chose a candidate who as a standard bearer would lead the party to victory and see to it that their just demands were complied with.

"The demand for this candidate came up from all the great centres of industry. It came from the men who worked and the men who toiled under unfavorable conditions; it came from the factory and from the farm, from organized labor and from unorganized labor. And in my judgment the candidate chosen by these masses of the people would have been a logical candidate. He had always stood for the things that the people desired and needed. He had fought the battles of the people from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic by means of a great chain of newspapers, and his fight for them had not been without beneficent results.

Always a Democrat.

"He had always been a Democrat. He supported Cleveland in three campaigns, and in 1896 he furnished the only newspapers of metropolitan influence to support the Democratic ticket. In that campaign of 1896 he made sacrifices for our party beside which the efforts of the average partisan pale into insignificance. In the subsequent campaign of 1900, at the earnest solicitation of the Democratic National Committee he established another paper in Chicago avowedly for the purpose of supporting Democracy and the people's cause. And so through nearly twenty years he has stood prominently forth as a deep thinker in all public questions, using his great influence in behalf of the people and

Member of the Committee on Liquor Laws Says Majority Favors Giving the Privilege to the First-Class Hotels

"The "semicolon" law, amended so that the midnight liquor-selling privilege shall extend to 'high-class' hotels only, will be favorably reported by the committee on liquor laws to the House. This positive statement is made by a member of the committee and one of the best informed members of the Legislature.

The committee will also report a compromise "minor" law. The proposed bill making it an offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for a minor to solicit a drink at a licensed bar, will not be favored by the committee, but a measure will be reported that will take away the blackmailing privilege that lurks in the present law relative to the sale of liquor to minors.

Governor Douglas's inaugural suggestion that each city and town regulate the hours of selling meets with no committee favor.

The liquor laws committee will meet Tuesday in executive session and decide on the drafts of the semicolon and new minors laws to be reported to the Legislature. A prominent member of the committee explains the status of new liquor legislation as follows:

"The 12 o'clock closing bill to be reported is practically the old, so-called semicolon bill. This bill will be designed to give first class hotels the privilege of selling liquor until 12 o'clock to guests who resort to them for food or lodging. It will not mean an open bar for the hotels after 11 o'clock and until 12; it will simply mean that guests may be served with liquor from 11 to 12 o'clock. As the situation now stands, Senator Lane, of Suffolk, chairman of the committee, Representatives Paull, of Taunton, Davis, of Salem; Adams, of Lowell; Jackson, of Lynn, Doherty, of Boston, and Egan, of Boston, favor the 12 o'clock privilege for hotels. That makes seven committee members in favor. Senator Parker, of Hampden; Representatives Denham, of Pepperell, and Patrick, of Warren oppose the midnight privilege. Senator Collins, of Suffolk, has not made up his mind how to vote on the question.

"From what members of the House have told me, and from what anti-liquor people say, I am of the opinion that the House will refuse to change the existing law. One thing the liquor men have done this year is in their favor. They have frankly said they are not trying to make a fight on punctuation, but want the law changed to better their trade conditions. The new feature of law that the committee report will make will be a definition of what constitutes a first-class hotel. The number of available rooms for guests will be a factor in the definition. I do not think any member of the committee is in favor of reporting a bill with a midnight privilege for every kind of a hotel."

GOULD REFUSES TO PAY WIFE'S BILLS.

Declares He Makes Her Sufficient Allowance, and Is Not to Be Held for Bills That Creditors Now Sue For

New York, Feb. 11.—Mrs. Howard Gould was made defendant in a suit brought against her in the District Municipal Court to-day for $110.05 for household provisions which George H. Schaffer, a grocer and butcher at No. 474 Fourth avenue, says he is unable to collect. Mrs. Gould was also recently sued for a $3,000 dressmaker's bill, and the case is pending in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Gould, who has been joined on technical grounds with his wife in both suits, has made affidavit that he makes his wife a sufficient allowance for all her needs, and he is, therefore, not responsible for her debts.

The suit filed to-day, as well as the one now before the Supreme Court, was brought by Marks & Weltar, attorneys at No. 150 Broadway.

"Mr. Gould says he makes his wife a sufficient allowance, and, if that is so, that absolves him," said Attorney Marks to-day. "The reading of the affidavit might be interpreted to mean that he believes his wife too extravagant."

In the suit for the dressmaking bill, Attorney Marks will ask Mrs. Gould to try on one of the dresses in question, that the jury may decide whether they fit or not.

The provisions which form the subject of the suit brought yesterday were furnished Mrs. Gould on four days beginning September 1, 1904. Since then Butcher Schaffer says that he has tried many times to collect the bill, but in vain. The letters and statements sent by him to the Gould mansion have been ignored. Mrs. Gould delayed the payment of the bill until the exasperated butcher decided to take the matter into the courts.

The papers filed in the District Municipal Court to-day have appended to them in detail the provisions furnished Mrs. Gould on the four days in question.

The suit will come up for a hearing February 15. Mrs. Gould has been served with a summons to appear in court on that day. A duplicate set of papers were also served upon Mr. Gould in his office last Thursday.

Mr. Gould's reply in the dressmaker bill is on file with the clerk of the Supreme Court, where the suit has been placed on a short calendar to obtain an early hearing. Howe & Hummel are the attorneys for Mr. and Mrs. Gould.

DIED SUDDENLY IN HIS WIFE'S ARMS

While awaiting a prescription, Michael J. O'Brien, aged sixty-three years, of No. 63 Newton street, Somerville, dropped dead in a drug store in Union square last night. A number of persons in the store at the time crowded about the dying man as his wife appealed to him to speak to her, but her words fell on deaf ears, for her husband died in her arms without recovering his speech.

Long before the hour for the opening of the doors an impatient mob tried to force its way within, and when the limit of admissions was exhausted there were still many on the outside who were obliged to swallow their disappointment and hear the wild cheering that betokened the stirring races that were under way on the board track.

Every important Eastern college was represented by many limbed athletes, [illegible] their colors and clashed with their rivals for the supremacy so dear to the collegians heart.

Rarely has such a stellar lot of athletes assembled together in one cluster, and the mightiest of the cinder path and field were there struggling for the top honors in fleetness of foot.

Best of College Talent.

With the flower of the college arena competing for prizes and the cream of the scholastic talent mixed in, the standard of the whole meeting was above board.

When the first event was called there were few seats vacant and every vantage point in the building was eagerly sought for and even a few venturesome spirits climbed the rafters almost out of sight.

It was only slightly after the hour scheduled for starting that the men for the first trial heat in the forty yard handicap came to the mark.

There was a big raft of ambitious sprinters anxious to shine in the limelight of popularity. There were over 150 runners entered and the heats was snapped off in rapid shape. A half dozen heats were run off before anything happened to set the crowd going. It was the time made that created a sensation.

The heats had been caught in monotonous regulation at 4 3-5 and 4 4-5 seconds, but J. McGinness, of the Cathedral A. A., a youngster with a fast stride and the limit mark of nine feet got a good start and held up the watches at 4 2-5 seconds.

The first star to appear came in the ninth heat, when Charley Seitz, of Georgetown University, ran from scratch. He was too heavily marked to get a place. Bill Eaton the New England crack, ran from scratch in the following [illegible], but he [illegible] the ruck.

Charley McCarthy, a local boy wearing Georgetown's colors, brought out the cheering when he shot ahead in his heat and won out from the three foot mark. P. E. Watson, a schoolboy from Roxbury Latin, sprung a surprise by cleaning the bunch up in his heat in the newly made time of 4 2-5 seconds from the nine foot mark.

It took twenty-two heats to dispose of the trials in the dash, and the winners got out to settle the semi-final round. The high markers began to make their presence felt as H. L. Hind, of Brookline, eight feet, got the first semi. McGinness, with nine feet, took the second heat; Cronin and Bell, of Harvard, qualified for the final, as did Castleman, the flyer from Colgate, winning from the two-foot mark. His work was a [illegible] and he only got in the charmed circle by a strong burst of speed.

When the five men got on their marks for the final heat in the handicap there was much expectation regarding a winner. Little McGinness, of the Cathedral A. A., caught the judge's eye, with J. S. Bell, Jr., of Harvard, in second place. Bell had a foot less handicap than McGinness. Cronin, another Crimson runner, just got in for third prize.

Alarming Increase in Number of Deaths From Dread Disease in Boston, There Being 48 in the Week That Is Just Ended

Forty-eight persons died of pneumonia in Boston during the week which ended last night, and members of the Board of Health of the City Government believe that under-heated and improperly ventilated elevated and street cars have been the principal cause of the alarming spread of this disease. Officials of the Boston Elevated company, when confronted with the statements of the city health officials, stated that the company was aware that during certain hours of the day the public must travel in cars which are without any heat, but that the situation could not be remedied this Winter.

The attention of the Board of Health officials was called to the increase in the number of deaths due to pneumonia at the close of the day yesterday. When the records were compiled it was found that from January 1 to the present time there have been 258 deaths from pneumonia. During the corresponding six weeks of 1904 there were but 229 deaths from this disease.

Dr. Samuel H. Durgin, chairman of the Board of Health, when seen last night by a representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN, said:

"There is no question in my mind but that one of the manifold causes for epidemics of colds, bronchitis and pneumonia at this time of the year is the street cars. They are too often too poorly ventilated, either overhead or the reverse, and in such constant changes the travelling public incurs one of the best means to this last named dread sickness."

J. Harvey White, representing General Bancroft, president of the Elevated railway, said in reply to the charge that the company was not heating its elevated or surface cars:

"We can give the public no heat in any of our cars between the rush hours of 5 o'clock and 7 o'clock in the evening. This state of affairs, we fear, cannot be remedied during the present Winter. Last October one of the 5,000-horse power engines at our Albany street power station broke down. The setting up of the engine will take several months, so that we cannot hope to have it running again before April 1. If pneumonia or any other disease has been spread by infection as a result of these cold cars we can only say that we did the best we could under the circumstances.

$500,000,000 of Capital Joins Labor's Demands for Reforms.

STRIKERS PLAN AGAIN TO MARCH ON RULER

Tragedy of January 22 May Be Repeated To-morrow in St. Petersburg.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

[illegible], Feb. 11.—Russia to-day faces a crisis almost without precedent in [illegible] hand millions of work[illegible] oppressed, barely able [illegible] the necessities of life, demand a reform which will give them education, the right to legislate, to act and think for themselves and on the [illegible] demanding [illegible] which will give them a government based on justice and legislation [illegible] Such unanimity of opinion between capital and labor presents [illegible] a question in [illegible] of which he may lose or gain his Empire.

No repressive measures will end the deeply rooted national movement of the Russian people, declare the capitalists. And they point out the necessity [illegible] before the law [illegible] freedom of speech and press and compulsory education.

"Freedom" is the cry of marching thousands in the streets of St. Petersburg, where the strike has been renewed and nearly [illegible] workers have gone out and that is the cry [illegible] Czar's [illegible] To-morrow [illegible] may lead to a tragedy beside which the massacre of January 22 before the Winter Palace will be trivial, because General Trepoff, by order of the "Little Father of the Russians," terror-stricken and in seclusion in his palace, has refused the request of workingmen that they be allowed to see and confer with their Emperor. To-day the Father Gopon organization may [illegible] again on the Czar at his palace, with peace in their hearts, to give Nicholas II an opportunity to repeat to them in person the promises which he has [illegible] yet fulfilled.

REVOLUTION RUNS RIOT.

"Freedom," too, is the cry of hundreds who within the past forty-eight hours have fallen under the bayonets and before the rifles of the Czar's troops. The spirit of revolution is [illegible] over the Russian empire, the soldiery is blood mad, the populace, desperate, careless of consequences, ask in peace and if a refusal of their new requests comes no man may tell the end.

But another factor which the Czar must face, and possibly the most dangerous which has as yet been presented to him is the disaffection [illegible] Russian troops. Revolutionists [illegible] in Russia [illegible] have ever been in the past despite [illegible] repressive measures of the government [illegible] among the troops [illegible] Czar's Cossacks are [illegible] For this reason the Czar [illegible] But among the [illegible] soldiery this disaffection is reported to be widespread [illegible] Brothers, fathers, relatives, even wives and sweethearts of the troops, are in those mobs.

SURPRISED AT TREPOFF.

Great wonder has been expressed during the past week that one man, Governor [illegible] Trepoff, has succeeded in holding the St. Petersburg uprising so far in check. [illegible] is now urged that [illegible] Trepoff in Russia [illegible] would be able to do as effective work there.

The fact of the matter is, however, no city in Europe is built [illegible] for barricade fighting of the Paris type, or so favorably for the operations of artillery and disciplined soldiers as is St. Petersburg.

The great working classes districts are cut off from the administrative and military centre by the [illegible] of the Neva, which is crossed by only a few bridges, and the ice-covered expanse of which could be swept for miles by a single battery of [illegible]

WOMEN DARE COSSACKS.

Most of the work of slaughter throughout the Russian empire within the last forty-eight hours has been done by the Cossacks. Hundreds have fallen dead or wounded, women have bared their breasts to the troops and dared them to fire, a boy with a wooden crucifix flaunted it in the face of the soldiers. "This is our only weapon," he said. "Fire if you will."

Father Gopon as a leader seems to have been removed by acts of the government. His organization, however, remains intact, but leaderless. Workingmen are meeting to-night in St. Petersburg and in other affected cities, [illegible] openly in others, planning, talking over the situation, seeking their rights from employers, but mainly their rights from a government.

In Lodz constant clashes between the troops and the strikers, precipitated at one time by the workmen, at others by the soldiery, have claimed half a hundred lives. Disorders there continue. To-night minor disturbances are reported. The list of wounded includes hundreds. In Lodz there seems to be more of the revolutionary spirit than in any of the other affected cities.

Sosnovice, where 100 have fallen within the last two days, reports further turbulences to-day. In Skarvsko the troops fired into a crowd of 15,000 persons and

GERMANY MAY SEIZE COAL MINES.

Coal Barons Submit With Ill Grace to Kaiser's Order to Settle Labor Difficulties By a Board of Arbitration

PEOPLE WILL FIGHT TYRANNY OF WEALTH

By Malcolm Clarke.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Copyright, 1905, by the Hearst News Service.

Berlin, Feb. 11.—It looks very much as if Germany is going to show America the way to deal with the trusts.

The coal barons with ill grace submitted to the command of the Kaiser and agreed to arbitration of the difficulties between themselves and their employes, but it looks very much as if they have given in too late.

By refusing to give in to the reasonable demands of their men, they allowed a strike to break out which proved the existence of a monopoly which held German industry in the hollow of its hand, and the German people and their Kaiser, being less patient than the American people and government, have no desire to allow themselves to be bullied and tyrannized by a few millionaires, may still decide to do what is considered rank anarchy in the United States—seize the coal mines, pay a fair price to their present owners and in the future run them as the railroads and the telegraph are already, for the benefit of the whole people.

There are times when a monarchy with the right kind of a man on the throne is not a bad thing at all. And when the coal monopoly has been killed off the turn may come to kill off others in which Americans are directly interested, the fight against the Tobacco Trust may be taken up in real earnest, and the American Tobacco Company will in that case come out second best.

Germany Watches Russia.

It is not without fear and apprehension that the German government is watching events in Russia. There is little doubt that the riots in Russia proper are practically over, and though disturbances may occasionally occur, the great majority of the Russians are too stolid and too little interested in politics, of which they know and understand but little, to revolt against the existing government.

Not so, however, in Poland. It is there the danger lies, not only for Russia but for Germany. The Poles, endowed with a temperament and a character very much similar to the French, have for centuries been intently interested in politics. The love of excitement is born in them and the moment they think they have the slightest hope of success they will arise and fight to the last against their oppressors, and blood will flow like water before they are again beaten into submission.

But if they hate the Russians, they hate the Germans just as much, and a general revolt in Russia Poland will give echo in that part of the old kingdom annexed by Germany.

The Kaiser and his Government are well aware of this, and are even now filling up all garrisons in Posen and Silesia with troops consisting of men from other parts of the empire, while soldiers of Polish birth are made to serve as far from their homes as possible. That this is wise is evident to all, but it is at the same time arousing bitter [illegible] in German Poland, and many [illegible] protests which are being made but [illegible] the fears.

Kaiser Plans Sea Voyage.

With Prince Eitel Friedrich a convalescent from his recent attack of pneumonia, the Kaiser may now decide to go on the Mediterranean cruise which his health demanded, but which was given up because he did not want to alarm his people.

Already it is beginning to be said that the young Prince's recovery would be much [illegible] by a cruise in southern waters, and what would be more natural than that the Kaiser accompanied his son.

The Hohenzollern has been entirely renovated and is ready to start at very short notice, so it is safe to say that the Kaiser will take a cruise between now and the date set for the Crown Prince's wedding.

Anxious to Honor the "Angel of Port Arthur," Whom They Consider Most Deserving of Cross of the Legion of Honor

HER HEROISM IS THE TALK OF ALL PARIS

By Paul Villiers.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Copyright, 1905, by Hearst News Service.

Paris, Feb. 11.—How can the women of France most [illegible] the [illegible] Mme. Stoessel, for the heroic defence of Port Arthur?

That is the question which thousands of patriotic French women are asking themselves, but cannot solve. "My wife," said [illegible] to the French [illegible], "is the real defender of Port Arthur. She is the only person in town who has never [illegible] the bombardment, [illegible] even the worst dangers, or shown doubt as to our ability to hold out. Her example is worth a battalion."

Dozens of stories are being told about [illegible] the hospital service and who was always at the spot where the fiercest fighting raged that she might personally attend the wounded.

During the early fighting near Takushan she got mixed up in a very hot melee, but [illegible] fragment of a bursting shell grazed her temple, but she paid not the slightest attention to it.

The Angel of Port Arthur.

She simply continued to dress the wounds of the men. In September a large shell exploded in her dressing room. It ruined the furniture and stunned her, but an hour later she was at work in one of the hospitals.

France can do nothing to enhance her glory, but if ever anybody deserved the Cross of the Legion of Honor it is Mme. Stoessel, the angel in the hell of Port Arthur.

Having no King or Emperor themselves, Parisians, like Americans, are more or less interested in royalty, which is always interesting at a distance. The greater the distance the greater the interest.

For some time we have been exceedingly busy trying to pick out a suitable bride for King Alfonso, though that headstrong young man insists that he will do the picking or die a bachelor, thereby, of course, leaving his people citizens of a republic or subject themselves to a King not born to be their ruler by the grace of God.

Seek Bride for Prince.

Then came the riots in Russia, which kept us trembling in fear lest we should lose the Czar from too much [illegible], and now that peace has again been restored in the empire of our friend and ally we discover that we have neglected to look after the welfare of the Crown Prince of Portugal, who stands in need of a bride.

So far we have not been able to suggest anybody but Princess Patricia of Connaught, whom Parisians, by the way, seem to be particularly anxious about and whose name they mention in connection with [illegible] young Crown Prince, who bears the title of Duke of Braganza, is seventeen years of age.

HYMN NUMBER USED AS TIP TO PLAY ROULETTE.

Monte Carlo Gamblers Place Their Stakes on the Figures That Correspond to Those of the Sacred Songs at Church

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Monte Carlo, Feb. 11.—No hymn below No. 37 is sung at the English Church here for a curious reason. One Sunday an English peer after attending service went to the Casino and put a "maximum" $400 on 32, the number of the last hymn sung in the service. No. 32 won and the "inspiration" was widely talked about.

The next Sunday the church was crowded and the last hymn being again a low number an unseemly rush for the tables was made. The number again won and the bank lost heavily.

On the following Sunday the church could not accommodate all the would-be worshippers, but their ungodly intent was frustrated, as all the hymns "were off the board"—that is, numbered above 37 and in order to avoid this new and unseemly aid to gambling the clergyman has made it a personal point to see that no hymn below 37 is given out.

KING HAS HIS FIRST AUTO-CAR ACCIDENT

Edward Runs Into a Horse and Carriage, Smashes Wheel, But Is Not Hurt.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Feb. 11.—King Edward's avowed desire not to take advantage of his royal prerogatives and ignore rules which the general public must obey was shown when motoring from Windsor Castle to Windsor Great Park for some shooting. Although the nearest way to the park was along the famous Long Walk, the King, [illegible] notices are posted prohibiting motors along that road, went by way of High street and King's Road, Windsor.

The King, who is an enthusiastic motorist, has had his first accident. A short time ago he was motoring, by night, to Sandringham from [illegible], after his visit to the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, when a horse and carriage crossed the road in front of the car and a collision occurred. The carriage was damaged, one wheel being smashed and the coachman thrown out, but fortunately escaped injury. The King and his car escaped unscathed.

All Want to Let House to New American Ambassador and Tradesmen Look for a Brilliant Business Season

London, Feb. 11.—London house agents are clamoring more and more to get the ear of Mr. Whitelaw Reid, who it is well known, intends to occupy, as the new Ambassador to the Court of St. James, the first [illegible] in London.

Its owner, Captain Holford, the tall, fair-faced equerry of the King, cannot afford to live in more than two or three rooms of Dorchester House, and for years the blinds have been drawn in the large reception rooms.

London decorators, furnishers and caterers are eagerly looking forward to Mr. Whitelaw Reid's arrival, for it is generally understood that [illegible] American Ambassador.

CRIMSON FRESHMEN TOO MUCH FOR ELI'S TEAM.

Harvard 1908 Hockey Team Beats New Haven Rivals in a Warm Hockey Game by Score of 10 to 2 on Stadium Rink

The Harvard Freshman Hockey team defeated the freshman five from Yale yesterday on the Stadium rink, Soldiers' Field. The final score in the contest was 10 to 2 in favor of the Cambridge youngsters. At the opening of the game both the freshmen teams were so excited that the game resembled a game of football more than one of hockey. The youngsters threw all science to the wind and went at each other slam bang. Yale scored the first point in the game. Harvard soon made a point and tied the game.

Yale made her score two and then the Crimson freshmen came to themselves. They gradually pulled away from the Elis until the end of the second half found the score 10 for Harvard and 2 for Yale.

The work of Rumsey on the Crimson seven was the feature of the day. Newhall also played well for Harvard, as did Thayer for Yale, 1908. The line-up and summary:

BRITISH EXPERT AT BOSTON DOG SHOW

F. M. Jowett, of England, Will Judge Many Important Classes.

In selecting the list of judges for the Boston Dog Show, which begins at Mechanics Building February 21, the committee in charge has been very fortunate in securing the services not only of the very best American authorities on individual breeds, but they have a head liner in F. M. Jowett of Shipley, England, who is making his first visit to America for the [illegible] purpose of judging at the Boston show. His favorites are Irish terriers and Airdale terriers, and in addition to these two breeds he will also judge greyhounds, English foxhounds, Scottish, Welsh, wire-haired fox and Yorkshire terriers and whippets.

Mr. Jowett has perhaps done more to popularize the Irish terrier in England than any other one man. When they were first shown they had no regular classes, but by guaranteeing a sufficient entry he secured recognition for the breed, and as the Irish terrier increased in popularity the classification became more extensive, until at the present time they hold their own with any other breed. Mr. Jowett's idea was always to breed a good Irish terrier, and he succeeded in rearing three dogs which each won three championships. He has also won the Irish Terrier Club's breeder's cup outright, the twenty guineas breeder's cup at Liverpool outright, the ten guineas breeder's cup at Manchester outright, and over 600 prizes at first class shows.

ST. MARY'S THIRD WIN.

What was considered the most interesting basketball game that has ever been played in Dorchester was contested between the St. Mary's and the Dorchester A. A., which the former won, 15 to 9. It was the third consecutive victory in a series of five games for the winners. Referee King's poor decisions was chiefly responsible for Dorchester's downfall.

SHAFFER SAYS HE WILL MAKE CANDY HUSTLE

Champs' New Candidate for First Base Has No End of Confidence.

"Shaffer, the crazy coach, who played with Helena three years ago, writes to a friend in Seattle that he is going to Boston this Spring fully determined to take La Chance's job away from him on the champion team. Shaffer has nerve enough to think that he is as good as the best, but if Jimmy Collins keeps him the fans out this way who have seen the champions perform will be surprised. Shaffer is wintering in Helena, and has already gone into training, so he will report in first-class condition. If Shaffer ever cuts loose one of his crazy coaching stunts on the side lines in Boston, where he gets down on his knees and actually prays for the man at bat to make a hit, he will either be made a pet of as a curiosity or will be ordered to the foolish house. It is a cinch that Boston never saw anything in the baseball line like Shaffer when it comes to coaching. Tommy Tucker, the boy with the calliope voice, was tolerated around Boston for a long time, [illegible] he could not begin to do the crazy stunts that Shaffer cuts loose in a ball game, and then, too, Tucker could play that first bag in those days in a manner that puts him in a class by himself, while Shaffer is always in trouble when the ball is thrown at his feet."

Manager Fred Clarke, of the Pittsburg Pirates, has announced [illegible] Spring training trip. On March 12 he will take twenty-one men to the Hot Springs for a stay of three weeks. The team will then go to Louisville for three days, where George Tebeau is expected to have a strong team. Clarke says the Pirates are going South this year to work and not to experiment with young players. He thinks with [illegible], Harry Smith and Cassidy, the Pirates are well fortified behind the bat.

"Ginril" Jimmy Jackson, who was once a [illegible] Jackson played with the St. Paul club of the American Association last season and was sold to Cleveland for a sum supposed to be $4,000. The "Ginril" has received offers from Pennsylvania independent teams in some instances larger than Cleveland offered him.

Phil B. O'Neill, one of the Cincinnati Reds' backstops during the early part of last season [illegible] for his signature from Manager Tebeau of Louisville. O'Neill said the contract was to his liking and that he will likely sign and forward it before the end of the week. He would be permitted to go to Purdue University to coach the varsity baseball club instead of reporting for Spring practice with Louisville, and would not be called in by Manager Tebeau until one week before the playing season opens. O'Neill also has offers from the Pacific Coast League and Rochester, N. Y.

Harvard Five Wins Fast Game Over Yale Rivals

Playing for over two hours, and fighting every minute of the time, the Harvard five triumphed over the Yale team, at the Hemmenway Gym, 12 to 10. When the second half ended the score was a tie, 10 to 10. In the extra period, Captain Henderson threw the basket that won the game for the Crimson.

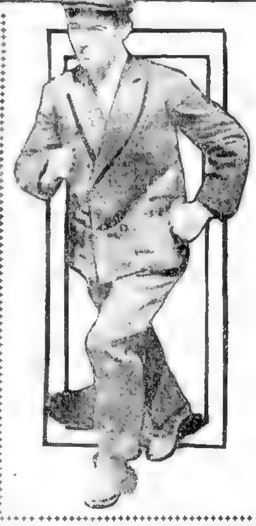
JIMMY WALSH, WHO MEETS MONTE ATTELL

These photographs of Jimmy Walsh, the New England champion bantamweight, were taken in the BOSTON AMERICAN office before the clever little boxer started for St. Louis a few days ago. Walsh is scheduled to meet Monte Attell at St. Louis Tuesday night. Eddie Keevin, who went West with Jimmy, says his boy is in fine trim and will make a good showing against his young opponent.



PULLIAM SAYS REDS MAY BEAT GIANTS

New York, Feb. 11.—President Harry Pulliam, of the National Baseball League, thinks that New York won't have a "cinch" in landing the pennant the coming season. According to a statement he gave out to-day, he seems to favor Cincinnati a great deal. Says Pulliam:

"There will be a much closer race in the National League this year than last. I don't think that the New Yorks, if they win the pennant again, will have an easy time of it by any means. The Cincinnati team not only has some promising new material, but it improved a great deal in its playing last year after Kelley made up his mind to let the umpires alone. If Kelley sticks to his reform the Reds ought to be in the fight for the pennant.

"The showing of the Pittsburgs last year can [illegible] entirely as an indication of their true strength. The Pittsburgs were a demoralized team. They never had their full [illegible] in the field. LAY BARE MISTAKE OF DEMOCRACY their rights, and consistently earning the proud title by which he is best known—that of the people's champion. I repeat, gentlemen, that when the people looked for the party to select a standard bearer they were wise in giving their preference to their champion.

"This desire on the part of the people found its first public expression in the convention held in Rhode Island a year ago. A feeling spread from that little State over into Massachusetts, through Connecticut and into New Jersey. Despite all that it said to the contrary, it permeated my own State (New York). It went out through the West and the great Middle West through Indiana and through Illinois. It leaped the great river and found an echo on the Pacific coast where the sentiment was united among the rank and file of the party that the principles for which we had stood should be reaffirmed, that the Democracy should put a bold front upon the situation, and that the man, who for so long had stood for these principles and fought for them, should be chosen to represent them in the capital of the Nation.

Trusts Did Not Want Him.

"The corporations doing business in defiance of law did not want him. He was too "dangerous" a man to suit their convenience and their robbing methods. None of the trusts wanted him. The politicians did not want him and the machines eschewed him. A great hue and cry was raised, and, incidentally, if we are to believe the words of Mr. August Belmont, an immense sum of money was also raised for the purpose of defeating the people's will. Slanderous stories were circulated. Every trick and artifice known to the professional politician was resorted to. By means discreditable, if not criminal, the delegation from New Jersey was stolen from the people's choice; the delegation from Connecticut as well, and the delegation from Indiana. Their tricks and their cajolery and their questionable methods did not stop here.

"I am sorry to say that some gentlemen on this side of the Chamber were lured away with false hopes and falser promises from the position which their constituents had hoped they would take.

"But in spite of all this fraud, trickery and treachery; in spite of the slanders uttered and the lies that were told; in spite of the united efforts of the Belmonts and the Ryans and the Hogerses and Lord Meyers; in spite of every effort on the part of privileged wealth to defeat the will of the people, I am proud to say that the great commoner and sterling Democrat who was named by the Rhode Island convention, a colleague of mine from the State of New York, William Randolph Hearst, went into that St. Louis convention and polled more than 200 votes.

Mr. Chairman, I believe a mistake was made then and a great opportunity lost to the Democracy. If I be asked as to whether or not the result would have differed from that recorded last November, had Mr. Hearst been the nominee, I would reply that prior to the St. Louis convention Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana and Illinois were all admittedly debatable ground. New York practically lost to the Republicans and South Dakota, Montana, Nevada, California, Wisconsin and other Western States possible to obtain for Democracy.

Dominated by Wall Street.

"But two days after the St. Louis convention the veriest novice in politics knew just what was going to happen and just what did happen. No one supposes for a moment that Missouri would have been lost to the Democratic column if the party had not been dominated by Wall street, as we all know it was.

I will go further and call attention to the result in Massachusetts. There a Democratic Governor was elected on the very principles which William Randolph Hearst stood for and was identified with. In fact, it is generally conceded that Mr. Hearst's [illegible] support of the Democratic [illegible] Governor in that State resulted in his election. [illegible] it not reasonable [illegible] that a like result would have been [illegible] had he been the candidate for President?

The same thing may be said of Minnesota, where a Democratic Governor was elected on almost identical lines.

"It is interesting to note in this connection the difference in the vote cast for the Democratic candidate for President last year and the Democratic candidates for Governor in the various States where election for governors occurred. The total mounts up to more than a million votes in twenty-four States of the Union alone. If this vote had been placed in the Democratic presidential column as we had a right to expect it would be placed, and the same proportion had been maintained in all the States, what a different result we would have had. I give the figures in the following table, showing the differences in the vote between the Democratic candidate for President and the Democratic candidate for Governor in 1904.

Michigan	Ferris	167,487
Minnesota	Johnson	152,699
Massachusetts	Douglas	128,065
Wisconsin	Peck	104,125
New York	Herrick	94,992
Nebraska	Berge	77,539
Washington	Turner	56,656
Kansas	Dale	58,353
Missouri	Folk	55,337
Colorado	Adams	45,650
New Jersey	Black	28,954
West Virginia	Cornwell	22,675
Montana	Toole	21,685
Utah	Noyle	17,241
Rhode Island	Garvin	15,910
Connecticut	Robertson	12,218
Idaho	Heitfeld	11,698
Indiana	Kern	9,590
North Dakota	Hegge	7,238
Wyoming	Osborne	6,936
Illinois	Stringer	5,894
South Dakota	Grill	6,325
New Hampshire	Hollis	4,451
Delaware	Pennewell	1,602
Total		1,112,509

And why? Because while the St. Louis platform was good enough and great enough, in the estimation of the people, it became no more than as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal when voiced to them by the Belmonts and the Ryans and the minions of Wall street who had charge of it.

Mistake Now Being Made.

"And Mr. Chairman, as I believe a mistake was made then, so I believe a mistake is being made to-day by the minority members of this House. We all knew that legislation of this character was to be brought up at this session. It has been called for by a Republican President, who, wise in his day and generation, knows that it behooves him, elected as he has been by so stupendous a vote, to get on the Democratic wagon and join the popular procession. He is wise enough to know that they were not all Republicans who voted for him and that the signal victory accorded him was not so much preference for him and his party, as it was a rebuke to the domination of the Democratic party by the men in charge last year. Men who were traitors to the party in 1896 and in 1900 led only to lead to defeat.

"Let me emphasize this further by calling attention to the fact that the total popular vote for President in 1904 was [illegible] than in 1900 it was greater by [illegible] votes, being 13,961 [illegible]. Notwithstanding the difference, in 1904 the Republican candidate received only 7,621,985 as against 7,207,923 for his predecessor in 1900, barely the natural increase to be expected in four years.

"Going a little further we find that where the Democratic candidate for President received 6,358,133 votes in 1900, Parker received only 5,000,[illegible] in 1904, a million and a quarter votes less as the result of the leadership which dominated our party last year.

"Figures do not lie, and from these figures I gather that a million and a quarter of Democratic voters stayed at home in disgust over the mistake made in the St. Louis convention.

"Add the million and a quarter who stayed at home through disgust to the million and hundred and twelve thousand that voted for Democratic Governors and a Republican President, and mark the vast difference we would have had in the general result had the people been given the candidate they desired to carry out their will.

Hearst Bill Best Measure.

"I say again that I regret and deplore the fact that a mistake is being made on this measure, and strange as it may seem, the mistake revolves around the personality of William Randolph Hearst. Nearly a year ago he introduced a bill touching this subject of interstate commerce, which, in the judgment of men more competent to form an opinion than I, has been pronounced entirely competent, wholly adequate, thoroughly Democratic and absolutely effective.

"The Hearst bill is a measure drawn from the experience of two years' litigation with the greatest railroad combination this country has ever seen—a combination not of railroads alone, but of corporations controlling one of the very necessaries of life. It is a measure which might well be taken as the party utterance on this great question, placing us in the vanguard of the movement and not simply trailing along in the rear of our opponents. Had it been taken up by our party it would have forced the Republicans to take it or leave it and go to the country on the record. It would have enabled us to draw a sharp line of distinction between the bill they offer for this much needed relief and our own.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, the opportunity was ours to stand boldly out as advocating a proper competent measure; the opportunity was ours to place our party in a great and glorious light before the country as [illegible] forever from such leadership as that which we had last year, and which as far as I know has had to do with placing us in this unenviable position.

Great Demand for the Bill.

"Gentlemen say that they don't know anything about this bill. Mr. Hearst was more or less absent yesterday and is absent to-day attending the important arguments being made before the Interstate Commerce Commission on this very Coal Trust fight, which has been [illegible] instrumental in the making of this bill. [illegible] the bill has [illegible] Mr. Hearst appeared before the Committee on two different occasions and fully explained it. That hearing is in print and has been for three weeks, making a report of more than 15,000 words in length, and gentlemen who say they don't know anything about it confess either to their negligence or their indifference.

"The voters of the country have manifested keener interest than [illegible] I myself have been deluged with requests for copies of the bill and I know that from all over the country such demands have been made upon my colleague who introduced it. The record bears witness to the fact that petitions have been received from all over the United States praying for the passage of this bill and I had the pleasure a few days ago of filing such a petition containing several hundred names from the Eighth Congressional District of Iowa, represented, I believe, by the honored chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Davey-Williams Bill.

Time does not permit me to discuss at length either this or any other of the measures that are before the House, not that it can be properly said that the Hearst bill is before the House. Had it not been that the gentleman from Missouri (Mr Shackleford) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr Lamar) had [illegible] the courage of their convictions, I doubt if any of us would have had the opportunity at this time to even so much as mention the Hearst bill. Why this should be so I do not pretend to explain. The fact remains that it is not, under the rule, subject to a vote.

"It is curious to recall the history of the so-called Davey-Williams bill in this connection. I am told at a conference which was not attended by all the minority members of the committee the Davey-Williams bill was conceived and born. This conference took place on a Saturday and was continued over the Sunday following. On the Monday succeeding, Mr. Hearst was accorded the privilege by the Committee to appear and explain his bill. He did so, as I have said, in a hearing embracing more than fifteen thousand words.

"At this time the Davey-Williams bill was made up of two sections covering about one page of typewritten matter. Subsequently it was brought into caucus and adopted as [illegible] expression of the Democrats on interstate commerce legislation as far as it went, giving us the privilege of looking further and seeking to obtain a wider and more comprehensive measure. The minority members of the Committee with the exception of Messrs. Shackleford [illegible] Lamar substituted this inadequate, incomprehensive and inconsequential measure as the substitute, but adding thereto some provisions not discussed in the caucus. And thus it was that the Hearst bill, or any other adequate and competent measure, could not be submitted to the House.

"Now the reason for all this I leave to the judgement of the people at large. Why it was done, I do not pretend to say, but I do know that the effect of such action at this time and of the prior action in the convention in St. Louis stands out as conspicuously as the setting of false beacons on a treacherous shore to lure the ship to its destruction. Why do wreckers set false beacons on a treacherous shore—that they may loot and plunder.

"Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man in my desire for immediate legislation looking to the control of these great highways of commerce, and putting every other question aside, in view of the urgent need therefor, I wish to say that not only will I vote for the so-called Davey-Williams bill, wishing that I had a better bill to vote for, but I will also vote for the majority measure rather than not vote for legislation upon this important question at all."

Bidding for Seats for Play to Be Given Week of March 13 to Be Liveliest on Record.

Tuesday will be the first auction day of seats for the coming First Corps Cadets' production of "Boodle & Co.," the latest R. A. Barnet presentation. Only seats for the first two nights of the production will be sold on Tuesday. Those for the remainder of the week will be auctioned on next Thursday and Friday. The new Cadet show is to be given at the Tremont Theatre the week of March 13.

From the advance requests for seats it now seems probable that every seat for the week will be sold long before the curtain rises on the first night. The Cadets expect to realize at least $30,000 on the week. Tuesday's sale will begin at 1:30 at the Tremont Theatre.

Governor to Attend.

One of the features of the show week will be Military Night, Thursday, March 16. All the seats on the lower floor and in the boxes will be reserved then for Governor Douglas and the State Militia in uniform. Only balcony seats for this night will be auctioned.

Cadets Twelfth Production.

"Boodle & Co." will be the twelfth production by the Cadets, the preceding ones being "Babes in the Woods," "Injured Innocents," "1492," "Tabasco," "Excelsior Jr.," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Simple Simon," "Queen of the Ballet," "Miladi and the Musketeers," "The Cap of Fortune" and "Cinderella and the Prince." None of these, however, were given the lavish production that will characterize "Boodle & Co."

The scene of the play is Desolation Gulch, Idaho, and is shown in the Prologue and the Epilogue. The major part of the piece is the dream of Boodle, a poverty stricken keeper of a tumble down hotel, who has a government claim which he has thought over and dreamt over for years. He tells every one what he is going to do when he gets his money, and is absolutely confident that it will come, amounting to millions.

In the development of this idea, there appear a funny little Dutch boy, a stranded actor, a young collegian, a miner, a captain of a United States cruiser, and his officers and crew, a bloodthirsty Spaniard and a fascinating daughter, and an adopted daughter of Boodle who has had Eastern advantages. There are twenty five musical numbers in the two acts.

SORES AND ULCERS

Six years ago I became afflicted with a severe sore leg which continued to grow worse, gradually, until the entire leg from the knee to the foot was one solid sore, which was very offensive. I spent over $1,000.00 on two trips to Hot Springs, and various local physicians treated me to no purpose. I had about come to the conclusion to have my leg amputated when a friend induced me to try S. S. S., saying if I would take it constantly for a year and it did not benefit me he would pay for the medicine. I began to take your medicine, and in the short space of seven months it completely and thoroughly cured me. I consider S. S. S. the grandest medicine the world has ever known. My leg is a witness today as to what S. S. S. will do when taken regularly.

VALDOSTA, GA., September, 1900.
Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

DEAR SIRS—I want to tell you about my case and the good S. S. S. has done me. Something like a rising came on my instep, very small at first, not at all painful, and I could wear my shoe without any trouble. But as it grew larger and began to pain me I consulted a doctor, but in spite of all he could do the sore got worse and began to discharge; then other sores came until the whole top of my foot was one large mass of sores and I could not walk. Then my husband, who had been cured of Scrofula by the use of S. S. S., said he believed it would cure me. I began taking it and eight bottles cured me; my foot healed up nicely. I believe I would have been a cripple for life but for S. S. S.

MRS. C. H. KING.

A great running sore, or deep offensive ulcer may develop from a slight scratch, bruise or pimple—a harmless looking little boil or slightly swollen gland may soon be an ulcerating mass that will develop into a cancerous ulcer, dangerous and destructive. Middle-aged and old people are the most frequent sufferers from old sores and chronic ulcers, but the young, even children, who have inherited weak constitutions or had them contaminated and tainted by Malaria, or other sickness, are afflicted in the same way. These chronic sores and ulcers are a constant drain on the system, sapping the vitality and strength. They depress the energy with their foul pollution, and are sure signs that the blood is charged with poisonous matters which in its weak, sluggish condition it is unable to throw off. Salves, washes, powders, etc., can never be of any permanent service in the treatment of sores and ulcers, because the trouble is not on the outside, but in the blood, and as long as it circulates through the body in its impoverished and poisoned condition the trouble will grow worse. The need is a remedy that will cleanse the blood of all poisons and impurities, build it up from its weakened state, increase its vigor and strengthen the whole system. S. S. S. does this, and is the only blood purifier that does. Rich blood is carried to the diseased parts, which forms new tissues and allows the sore or ulcer to heal. It works with nature because of its vegetable properties, and tones up every organ while effecting the cure. It brings a safe as well as a permanent cure, and is guaranteed entirely vegetable. Send for our special book on Sores and Ulcers, and write for any advice you wish. We make no charge for this.

EVANGELIST DAWSON'S CAMPAIGN TO SAVE ALL AMERICA WILL BEGIN SOON IN BOSTON

MOVEMENT WILL SPREAD TO PACIFIC.

English Divine, Who Has Led Many Great Revivals in His Own Country, Invited Here by Congregationalists

RESIGNS PASTORATE FOR AMERICAN WORK

Wireless Telegraphy Used by Him as Illustration of the Electric Force of Religious Reawakening of This Year

By J. Frank Davis.

"The church has marked time long enough; 'tis time for us to march."

In the vicinity of Boston has begun, with these words, a movement which is, its promoters fervently hope and pray, to Christianize all America. It is an organized campaign to evangelize the United States. A committee of Congregational ministers representing all sections of the country, with the Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, at its head, has arranged it. Starting in New England, it is planned to sweep westward through a four months' itinerary, until at the end of May the Pacific Coast shall be reached.

The leader of the campaign is the Rev. William J. Dawson of London, minister, missionary and evangelist. He was pastor of Highbury Quadrant church. For a year he conducted one of the most successful revivals London has ever seen. He has now resigned his pastorate, at the request of his American brethren, and began, almost as soon as he left the steamer last week, a whirlwind tour of America, preaching salvation to sinners.

Year of Revivals.

Religionists believe the committee has seized the psychological moment for this movement. It is a year of revivals. Abroad in the world is the force that sets in motion these remarkable religious movements—be it magnetism or telepathy, as scientists say, or the Spirit of God, as those who conduct the revivals aver. England has seen a great religious awakening. Business in many parts of London practically stopped during the noon hour for weeks while business men's services were held. In Wales, beginning with services held by a half-dozen miners, without pastor or leader or plan, a revival movement started that has gripped the whole principality. In America sporadic "quickenings," as the movements are commonly called by evangelical church members, are under way.

After a preliminary trip through smaller cities in western and northern Massachusetts, Vermont and Maine, Mr. Dawson will begin his Boston work a week from to-day. For a fortnight he will speak in various Congregational churches in Boston and vicinity every evening, and daily will conduct noon meetings for business men in Park Street Church. Thence he will go to New York State and then West. Behind him as he goes the committee controlling his movements hopes he will leave a broadening wake of converted men and women.

Rev. Mr. Dawson a Big Man.

The Rev. Mr. Dawson is a big man. While not tall, his frame is big. He is big-boned. His head, his nose, his mouth, his eyes are big. He has a big voice. His head indicates a big brain. Judging from the results of his evangelistic work and from the service I saw him conduct in Lynn Thursday and the twenty-minute conversation I had with him, his knowledge of human temperament and emotions is also expansive.

He does not look like the usual evangelist. Rather his face is that of a dark-hued Rembrandt portrait. It is round and fleshy, with a triple chin. A brown mustache, close-cropped, shades his mouth. A tuft of beard the breadth of a wide thumbnail hides the middle of the lower lip. Wide eyes of indeterminate color look out frankly from beneath bushy eyebrows. A forehead originally high is exaggerated by baldness in front. Back from it is brushed thick, long black hair that waves across the crown and bushes out behind.

Mr. Dawson dresses in black, with clerical coat and waistcoat, and a turn-down collar that accentuates the length and fullness of his neck, which he stretches forward with head peculiarly thrown back, as he talks from the pulpit. His hands are small and white. In public speaking he uses them constantly, the left more than the right.

Smiles Much While Speaking.

He makes no violent gestures. His favorite one is a gesture upward and backward to the length of the arm, with fingers laxly extended, and a slow forward sweep with bending wrist, as though sprinkling upon his hearers the dew of a blessing. In speaking he smiles much, with an expansiveness that shows a white set of teeth and throws into prominence three vertical wrinkles from cheek to jowl.

It is his voice that is his crowning glory—his voice and his vocabulary. He plays upon his voice as though it were an organ. It is now high and soft, now deep and powerful. He can whisper to be heard the depth of a church, or swell its tones to thrill with their intensity. Mr. Dawson, naturally or by training, is a fine elocutionist. His voice is one to arouse vast audiences to emotional fervor.

His words are well chosen and their range is wide. He speaks English purely, as in his books he has shown he can write it lucidly. He calls himself a preacher of "evangelism and culture." Yet he says frankly that he does not like that word "culture" in that connection, but cannot find a substitute in the language. "We must cultivate the power of seeking and saving lost souls," he says. "The man that is lost cannot get home. We've got to go out after him. It's a habit the Christian church should have. It must be cultivated."

Is Not a Sensationalist.

Mr. Dawson deplores sensationalism. His methods are not the methods of many evangelists. There is nothing in his manner of address nor his words, for instance, to recall Sam Jones, who a score of years ago conducted a great revival in Boston. On the other hand, one can see in him little resemblance to that greatest of American evangelists, Dwight L. Moody, with his big form, his lack of worldly or scholarly polish, and his intense personal magnetism.

It is not a religion of damnation that he preaches, but of salvation. He preaches the gospel of kindness and love. Punishment had no part in his word, as I heard him. Hell was not mentioned. The gospel he preached was the gospel of the lost sheep whom the Father sought until it was found, thinking naught of the ninety and nine safe in the sheepfold.

"That word 'culture' might be misunderstood," said Mr. Dawson. "Culture, as it is commonly meant, never saved anybody more than wisdom. All the wisdom of Christ didn't make him the world's Saviour. And culture can be as hostile to virtue as ignorance."

"Sane" Evangelist, Says Pastor.

The Rev. Charles F. Weeden, pastor of the Lynn Central Congregational Church, was with us when I talked to Mr. Dawson. "I think," he said, "I could substitute a word of common American usage for that 'culture.' I should say he was a 'sane' evangelist."

Mr. Weeden keeps in touch with the news of the day. "We need a quickening of the religious spirit in Lynn," he said. "There must be original sin when 'Rube' Waddell threw flatirons at his wife's father and knocks his mother-in-law down with a chair."

"The quickening that we need," said Mr. Dawson, "is the willingness to go out and seek sinners. Christ was offered a tabernacle on the mountain. That would have been like a quiet, conservative Congregational Church. Even Buddha didn't believe in private salvation. When the Church ceases to go out seeking to save all mankind we will have left a respectable Christian club, but not a church of Christ."

Sacrifices for Politics.

"It is hardest to me," he said, "to know that all the great sacrifices for man to-day are taking place under the flag of politics instead of the cross of Christ. The footfall of thousands is heard, marching the weary leagues to Siberia, in the faint hope that the children, or their children's children may see liberty in Russia, while under the cross of Christ sit an army of sermon-saturated idlers, doing nothing for outside humanity."

This is Mr. Dawson's definition of a revival.

"The electric force is in the air. The Marconi instrument sets it vibrating and sends messages across miles of ether. The message can be read only where there is another Marconi instrument, tuned to the right pitch. The power of God is always in the world. It is ready to be gathered up, but it can be only where the apparatus is tuned to pitch. We try, in these meetings, to tune the apparatus to receive the force.

"There is a scientific truth in these movements. The Christian church would lose half its force if it should lose the dynamic power of prayer."

Mr. Dawson closed the service at Lynn with prayer. It was brief, simple, impassioned. He prayed for the progress of the movement he has come to America to lead.

"Grant us, O God," he said, "what is better than pardon. Grant us passion and power."

CRANE INDICTED FOR PERJURY

John F. Crane, son of L. M. Crane, a rich oil dealer, of Boston, was indicted by the Grand Jury yesterday on a charge of perjury. His wife, Edna Crane, asked the court to allow her an income during her suit for a divorce from her husband, and Crane on the stand denied that he derived any income from the oil firm of which his father is president. Witnesses were produced who showed that Crane did get an income but under an assumed name.

SENATE AGHAST AT CHALLENGE OF ITS RIGHTS.

Learns, in Swayne Impeachment Proceedings, That There Is a Limitation Upon Its Power to Demand Witness's Answer

Washington, Feb. 11.—For the first time the United States Senate learned to-day that there were certain limitations upon its rights to demand an answer from a witness, in the impeachment proceedings against Judge Swayne. The point came up through an objection by Mr. Palmer, of Pennsylvania, to an inquiry as to whether Judge Swayne might be a resident of Florida, although not a tax-payer.

Senators stood aghast. They considered their judicial prerogatives had been interfered with. A warm debate followed, and Senator Lodge challenged the right to place a limitation on the Senate.

"This is a court," he contended. "We are sitting as judges."

Senator Platt, presiding, said the objection would of necessity have to be sustained. Then it was withdrawn and the hearing proceeded.

FUNERAL OF 'BROWN BREAD, KING' TODAY.

His Daughter Will Educate Her Brothers with the Fortune Which He Left Her. May Discontinue the Business

Miss Etta Blackburn, the sixteen-year-old girl who has just fallen heir to $20,000 or more of the snug fortune accumulated by her father, Thomas Blackburn, the "Brownbread King" of Charlestown, has plans quite definitely made as to the disposition of a part of her inheritance.

"I am going to look out for my two little brothers, educate them and complete my own education," she said to a representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

"Though I am not certain, as yet, I think I shall not try to continue the business in which I have worked with my father since I was eleven years old. I know it of course from A to Z, but it is heavy work for a girl, and I would rather do book-keeping or some work which would give me easier hours."

Mr. Blackburn died Thursday and will be buried to-day in Woodlawn Cemetery. He left a wife and five children, the youngest a baby girl just three weeks old. He was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, forty-three years ago, and there learned the trade of baker. When twenty years of age he came to this country. He evolved a method of his own of making brown bread, with which he supplied some of the leading hotels and restaurants of Boston and which earned for him the title of "Brown Bread King."

CITY HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTIVES IS BEING URGED.

Many Pamphlets Distributed Giving Advice to Sufferers, Hundreds of Whom Die for Want of an Institution

The erection of a municipal hospital for consumptives is being urged by the Boston Association for the Relief and Prevention of Tuberculosis. The labor unions and women's clubs of the city are co-operating in the movement, and at an early date the municipal authorities will be presented with a petition that is being circulated, setting forth the urgent demand for such an institution. The petition has been signed by 5,000 persons, but it is expected that this number will soon be doubled.

The association is doing a good work by instructing the unfortunate victims of the disease in order to check its progress and prevent other persons from becoming infected.

Pamphlets containing instruction to consumptives regarding their dress, food, the necessity for fresh air and their general conduct are circulated freely. This work, the association says, would be unnecessary if the public could be brought to realize the responsibility that the presence of tuberculosis patients in the community places upon the people to protect the healthy members from infection.

YALE OUTPLAYED TIGERS.

REPAIRS BEGIN ON CONGREGATIONAL BUILDING.

Damage by Saturday's Fire More Than at First Thought, but Structure Is to Be Put in Shape Again Without Delay

Preparations have begun for the repairing and cleaning of the eight-story brick and stone structure of the Congregational Society at No. 14 Beacon street, which was badly damaged by fire early Saturday morning.

According to Thomas Todd, a director of the Congregational Society, and the heaviest individual loser, the loss on the building will reach $35,000. Mr. Todd, who has a printing plant on the top floor, had five rooms practically destroyed. His loss will be about $4,000.

"The loss will reach a figure far in excess of what we at first thought," said Mr. Todd. "We, of course, are well insured. I personally will not lose except for inconvenience, as I am also covered by insurance. The fire started in the basement of the Congregational book store, and worked its way to the roof by means of the telephone conduit. Just what the cause is we do not know, but suppose it was defective wiring. We shall start immediately to put the building in shape."

TOBACCO WORKERS GO OUT ON STRIKE

New Milford, Conn., Feb. 11.—The strike of sorters at the J. S. Halpine tobacco warehouse here has not been settled and to-day 175 workmen quit work.

MAKING MONEY

I was born on a Maine farm. I have made some great successes in business. My GREATEST through CO-OPERATION.

I took $1,500 capital, supplied by Farmers, Women, Physicians, Clerks, Clergymen, etc., in Belfast, Maine, and in an HONEST, but VERY PROFITABLE business, EARNED and PAID THEM through BELFAST NATIONAL BANK, $5,000 IN CASH dividends in the first SIX months, $25,000 IN CASH dividends within the next year, and in 18 MONTHS I paid them in round numbers $330,000.00 CASH.

Every $1 Earned $220.00.

This is HISTORY. Reads like a fairy tale, but it is TRUE. I made poor people RICH. They helped me earn the riches. JUST READ THAT OVER AGAIN. I had $1,500. I earned and paid my stockholders $330,000 IN CASH IN 18 MONTHS. EVERY STOCKHOLDER GOT THEIR SHARE. That's MY WAY of doing BUSINESS. You must believe this statement is TRUE, for, if I were LYING, I wouldn't tell you the PLACE where I earned the money, and the BANK where it was paid.

I have learned the GREAT VALUE of the right kind of CO-OPERATION, learned how to make money fast in an HONEST, PROFITABLE BUSINESS from which MILLIONS are made every year.

I now have a new business of the SAME KIND, only MY FIELD is the WORLD. My plan one of EXTENDED co-operation. Stockholders EVERYWHERE who can give me INFORMATION and lend their INFLUENCE. The dividends MUST BE LARGE.

I already have 4,000 stockholders in the U. S., Canada, England, Cuba, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, Gibraltar, etc. I want a FEW MORE. The shares are going FAST. You can invest $1 on $100 monthly payments, if you wish. It will be SAFE and we will make it GROW. This is no get-rich-quick scheme, no "Frenzied Finance." You will be met on the level and treated on the SQUARE. I place 30 YEARS OF UNTARNISHED BUSINESS RECORD behind that statement. I only ask you in your own interest to INVESTIGATE. You shall have all the PROOF you want. REFERENCES, Bankers, Business Men, Church and Public Officials, etc. Send your address on a postal card. I will send a 24-page book,

"A Guide to Full Pockets."

FREE. I WILL PAY THE POSTAGE. Don't be "A Brother to the Ox." Stop PLODDING. Lift your head long enough to ask me to PROVE EVERY STATEMENT IN THIS AD. This is YOUR opportunity, don't miss it. Don't WAIT if you want something BETTER than you have GOT. Address F. F. Hanson, V. 143 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill., or my Boston representative, Mr. George W. Stover, V. 161 Devonshire st., Boston.

AIN'T IT A CORKER?

Dear Doctor Conway: I write to know if you are in same place, as I have a friend who wants to try your Bust Tablets. When I hear, she will send, thro' me, for two boxes; she does not wish her husband to know at present. Reference to your books will show I used a few boxes of your Tablets, and have often intended to write, thanking you for advice sent with them. I had splendid success; I consider your Tablets the finest thing in the world, as they not only develop the bust, but they improve one's general health. I take great care of myself, weigh 137, Waist Measure 25, bust 38, and it's plump and firm, as a young girl's. I am delighted with the success. I have tried many things, but as for developing the bust without your Tablets it is impossible. They seem to act in a few days. I cannot praise them enough. Hope to hear at once. Mrs. A. G. S., West 79th St., New York City. Come, read original, or we forfeit $1,000. We enlarge the bust 4 to 10 inches every time, or forfeit $1,000. Call for FREE INSTRUCTIONS. Sealed facts, 4c. stamps. BEACON SHINES OUT FROM A HUGE ICE BULWARK AT MINOT'S LEDGE

Keepers Frates and Lopus Are Comfortable Inside, Despite Blizzards Which Drive Big Waves Over the Famous Rock

It is a sight that attracts the gaze of passengers on every incoming steamship. The wall of ice is broad at the base and tapers until near the top, where it is broken in several irregular shapes at the narrow window that has been serving the keepers as an entrance since their doorway near the base was crusted over.

To get in and out Keepers Frates and Lopus have been compelled to use tackles. Rigged to the dome, the tackles have hauled them up and slid them down over the smooth surface of the ice.

Beautiful as the light looks in the day time, it is much more beautiful at night, when the shining rays from the powerful beacon shine about the crystals of ice, throwing them into flashes that look at a distance like so many diamonds.

Seas Dashed with Fury.

It has been hard treatment that the light and its doughty keepers have had since the storms began to rage this Winter. So high did the seas come that the spray was dashed over the top of the light and everywhere it struck it left its mark.

The light, firm and secure as it is on the rock, was shaken to its very foundation. The seas that carried many vessels ashore dashed with equal fury at the wall of masonry, but it held its ground. Its keepers were knocked from their feet by the rocking.

The keepers, all old seafarers, who look after the lights, laugh when the landsman seeking information suggest that they must have had a pretty tough experience during the storms of the last two weeks and particularly on the night of the blizzard.

"I would just as soon be over there in old Minot as here," replied Joseph F. Frates, rugged and hearty, who, with Roscoe G. Lopus had the watch during that period. He was standing near the government station on the mainland.

"It is true we were out there for seventeen days, which was half a week longer than we usually stay for a watch, but we were comfortable.

"One of the Worst in Years."

"But the Lord bless you," and his seamed and weather beaten face wrinkled into a smile, "I've been at sea in Winter for months at a time in the days of sailing ships, and so has my partner, Lopus, when we didn't know half the time whether we were on a vessel or an iceberg; when we had to dig the sails out of the ice before we could furl them, and chop a hole to let the smoke out of the galley.

"I don't know though that either of us has seen any worse storms than that one week before last during the thirteen years off and on that I've been stationed here. It certainly did blow a gale, and the sea did pound pretty hard. We had to chop the ice away with a marlin spike around the railing up there, and we had to cut it away from the lights or the flashes wouldn't have come out distinctly, so that vessels could read the one, four and three flashes to tell them that this was Minot's Ledge.

"Yes, I guess she shook a little, but nothing special. When the blizzard was at its height on the night of the 25th of last month some water came in through the lantern ventilator, and the vibration, I guess it was, shook a lifter off the stove.

"We'll have to chop away all that ice from the top. That's what made the lighthouse quiver a little in the storm. I guess she was a little topheavy. But there was no damage done."

CREW KEPT AT PUMPS ALL NIGHT

After lying ashore on Gallup's Island for twenty-four hours, pounded by heavy seas, the fishing schooner Squanto, Captain McKay, was brought safely to T Wharf yesterday. Three tugs of the Commercial Towboat Company worked all night before they succeeded in hauling her from her dangerous position. The vessel leaked badly, and her crew of seventeen men was kept at the pumps all night.

LYNN GAS COMPANY WOULD ISSUE MORE STOCK.

Though Selling Product at 90 Cents a Thousand Feet It Pays to Its Stockholders a Dividend of Ten Per Cent

Lynn, Feb. 11.—The Lynn Gas and Electric Light Company has filed with the Massachusetts Board of Gas and Electric Light Commissioners a petition for permission to issue additional stock to the amount of $230,000, to be used largely in improving the company's facilities for supplying gas and electric light to the people of Lynn. The largest item of this expense will be the laying of underground conduits for the wires of the electric service.

This petition, coming at a time when the people of the State are interested in the attempt of the Boston gas companies to secure an inflated capitalization, and to avoid reducing the price of gas to eighty cents, which the testimony before the Gas Commission has demonstrated is not only feasible but imperative if the public's interest is of concern, calls to mind the fact that the Lynn Company, although selling gas for ninety cents a thousand, is paying a dividend of ten per cent.

A reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN asked the treasurer of the company why it was possible for this low price for gas and high rate of dividends to be maintained. His reply was laconic:

"Good management," he said.

Previous to 1884 the price of gas in Lynn was $2. From then until 1897 nine reductions in price were made, the price in 1897 being $1. In 1897 another reduction of 10 cents a thousand was made, making the present rate 90 cents a thousand, with an additional 10 per cent discount if the bill is paid before the 10th of the month.

During this period the company's capitalization has increased several times, notwithstanding which it has paid a 10 per cent dividend annually.

It has been the policy of the company to keep outside of all entanglements with other gas companies, none of its stock having been in the market for many years, to be a shuttlecock for the battledores of stockholders.

The further policy of the company has been to keep in close touch with the people and to consider immediately any request for a decrease of price or an improvement of the service, every complaint or request being the subject of prompt investigation.

MONTREAL BURGLARS GET $15,000 IN GEMS

Montreal, Feb. 11.—The most serious burglary Montreal has had in years took place about 3 o'clock, when two safes in the office of Ives & Lavelle, working jewellers, were blown open. It is believed $12,000 to $15,000 worth of diamonds was secured, in addition to a lot of fine gold. The burglary was evidently done by experts.

LOOTED HER HOME WALKING IN SLEEP

Sioux City, Ia., Feb. 11.—Did Mrs. Mary Halverson, a widow, living at Twenty-sixth and Main streets, rise in her sleep and, seeing robbers in her dreams, wreck her own home and then flee, screaming for protection against assailants who existed only in her mind?

The woman, who is more than ninety years old, was found lying on the ice in Perry Creek, a hundred feet north of her house, her clothing wet and bedraggled, one wrist and hand swollen. To-day she is in bed ill of exposure, still claiming her little home was entered by two men who upset all the furniture, scattered flour and provisions over the rooms and chased her into the night, screaming for help.
